Public Sector Pay

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 12 November Official Report, column 994, if he will set out how he intends to apply the conditions to public sector pay rises.

Mr. Dorrell: As my right hon. Friend announced in his autumn statement on 12 November, the Government's policy is to restrict public sector pay settlements to between zero and 1½ per cent. in the coming year. The Government expect this policy to be applied without exception throughout the public sector regardless of the normal method of settling pay. For central Government employees and NHS staff not covered by review bodies the Government will apply the policy directly as part of its responsibility for setting the pay of these groups. Application of the policy to staff covered by the pay review bodies was set out in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's answer of 13 November 1992, at column 1002. Spending allocations have been adjusted to reflect the impact of the policy on other public sector groups.

Valuation Office

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he has made to the Valuation Office executive agency's published key targets for the year 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson: Yes. The key target for the clearance of non-domestic rating appeals has been increased from 302,000 to 308,000. This is to take account of additional receipts from the Welsh Office to maintain the current good progress in clearing outstanding appeals.

United States-United Kingdom Taxation Agreements

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the United States-United Kingdom taxation treaties and agreements together with the dates when they took effect.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 November 1992]: Two agreements are in place with the United States.

First, the taxation of income and capital gains is covered by arrangements which comprise a convention dated 31 December 1975, as amended by protocols of 26 August 1976, 31 March 1977 and 15 March 1979. The convention, as amended, in general took effect for the tax year, financial year or chargeable period beginning in 1975. The relevant provisions are detailed in Statutory Instrument 1980: No. 568 titled The Double Taxation Relief (Taxes on Income) (The United States of America) Order 1980.

Second, provisions regarding the taxation of inheritances and gifts are set out in Statutory Instrument 1979: No. 1454 titled The Double Taxation Relief (Taxes on Estates of Deceased Persons and on Gifts) (United States of America) Order 1979. This convention was concluded on 19 October 1978 and took effect from 10 November 1979.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the amount of advance corporation tax repaid to United States companies with United Kingdom subsidiaries in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 November 1992]: Payments of tax credits to non-resident parent companies under the United Kingdom/USA double taxation convention—companies which control at least 10 per cent. of the voting stock of the United Kingdom company—are estimated to have been as follows:

£ million

	Tax credits payable
1988-89	390

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when either he or the Governor of the Bank of England knew of banking accounts held in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International by Matrix Churchill or its individual executives that were used for the export of equipment to Iraq which could be used for defence purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 November 1992]: Neither my right hon. Friend the Chancellor nor the Governor of the Bank of England has ever been given any such information.

Iraq (Military Equipment)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when either the Government or the Bank of England was informed that accounts held in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International were used for the export of equipment to Iraq which could be used for defence purposes between 1987 and 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 November 1992]: Neither the Government nor the Bank of England has ever been given any such information.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the income from duties on Scotch whisky in each of the past 10 years in cash and constant price terms.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 16 November 1992]: The following is the estimated income which includes whiskey from Northern Ireland.

ENVIRONMENT

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by location, the Ordnance Survey triangulation pillars that have currently been adopted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Responsibility for this subject has been delegated to the executive agency. I have asked Professor David Rhind, chief executive for the Ordnance Survey to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Rhind to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the adoption of Triangulation (Trig) Pillars.

Ordnance Survey has recently completed its assessment of the pillars it needs to maintain as part of its survey control network. We have decided to maintain 1,269 pillars, leaving 4,906 for which we have no further need.

Great interest has been shown by a wide variety of organisations and individuals in adopting single or groups of pillars for voluntary maintenance. We are now starting the process of dealing with these applications and publicising opportunities. This will take some time to complete because, whilst the pillars will remain the property of Ordnance Survey, we have to obtain the permission of the land owners for those adopting pillars to have access.

In short, no pillars have yet been adopted but the process for adoption is now under way. We anticipate this will take several months to complete.

Please let me know if you would like me to supply a list of adopted pillars and their locations when the exercise is over.

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the fact-finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit.

Mr. Howard: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to my executive agencies under their chief executives. I have asked Mr. Roger Courtney to arrange for a reply to be given for the Building Research Establishment; Professor David Rhind for the Ordnance Survey; Mr. Stephen Crow for the Planning Inspectorate; Mr. Marcus Buck for the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre; and Mr. Roger Powell for the Buying Agency.

Letter from Roger Courtney to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your question regarding fact finding visits that I have made during the last twelve months.

My recent visits are listed below:

Transport Research Laboratory (Executive Agency, Department of Transport).

National Institute for Standards and Technology, USA.

Technical Research Institute, Finland, (VTT).

Such visits provide me with comparative information on sources of funding and associated policies, programme formulation and management, and operational arrangements and therefore assist the future development of BRE. Where appropriate, the scope for co-operative working is also explored, to mutual benefit. My many regular contacts with heads of research executive agencies and with my counterparts in other countries supplement these specific visits.

I would be happy to provide further information if you wish.

Letter from David Rhind to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked me to reply to your question about fact finding visits made by the chief executives of agencies.

I have not made any visits which I would classify as "fact finding" since I took up my appointment as Chief Executive of Ordnance Survey in January of this year.

Letter from Stephen Crow to Mr. Martin Redmond Dated 28 October 1992:

In reply to your Parliamentary Questions, I am asked on behalf of the Secretary of State for the Environment to list both the titles of papers published by the Planning Inspectorate since it became an agency and the fact finding visits made by myself in the last 12 months; and to indicate the findings resulting from those visits. The Planning Inspectorate became an Executive Agency only on 1 April this year, and so a full 12 months have not yet elapsed.

The only Inspectorate paper published since 1 April is entitled "Good Practice at Planning Inquiries". It was published on 7 September 1992 as an Annex to Department of the Environment Circular 24/92 (Welsh Office Circular 47/92).

Since April I have made one fact finding visit, to Edinburgh and nearby, where I was shown some interesting examples of urban regeneration, and where I was able to discuss, with my opposite numbers in Scotland and Ireland, matters of mutual concern. The visit and meeting resulted in useful comparison of professional and managerial practice.

Letter from Mr. Marcus Buck to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

I am responding to your question regarding the fact finding visits undertaken during the last twelve months by Agency Chief Executives in the Department of the Environment, and the resulting findings.

During his last months in office, my predecessor, Roy Kendrick, did not undertake any fact finding visits. As Chief Executive designate I conducted a series of visits to conference centres in order to familiarise myself with the industry. My findings were not aggregated into a publishable form.

If I can be of any further assistance please do not hesitate to contact me.

Letter from Roger H. Powell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

I have been asked to reply direct to your parliamentary question regarding fact finding visits by Chief Executives.

I have undertaken no "fact finding" visits as such. I have visited a number of principal customers and suppliers but these have primarily been to promote relationships.

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Howard: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to my executive agencies under their chief executives. I have asked Mr. Roger Courtney to arrange for a reply to be given for the Building Research Establishment; Professor David Rhind for the Ordnance Survey; Mr. Stephen Crow for the Planning Inspectorate; Mr. Marcus Buck for the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre; and Mr. Roger Powell for the Buying Agency.

Letter from R. G. Courtney to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

Airports (Planning Applications)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the length of time between submitting the application and a final decision being announced in respect of all planning applications involving airport expansion that were subject to a local public inquiry since 1970.

Mr. Baldry: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The table gives details of the length of time taken to determine most of the major airport expansions subject to public local inquiry since 1977.

Economic Development

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to change the procedures used to designate scheduled authorities for the purposes of the Local Government (Promotion of Economic Development) (Amendment) Regulations 1992, to ensure that scheduled authorities are those local authorities which have the highest levels of unemployment.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. Those local authorities designated by the Local Government (Promotion of Economic Development) (Amendment) Regulations 1992 which were not previously designated in the Local Government (Promotion of Economic Development) Regulations 1990, qualified on the basis that, in whole or in part, they fell within a travel-to-work area with an unemployment rate above the—narrow base—national average for England of 9·8 per cent. for the period from April 1991 to March 1992. The list of scheduled authorities will be reviewed again in the light of the unemployment statistics for April 1992 to March 1993.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many English local authorities, which were designated scheduled authorities for the purposes of the Local Government (Promotion of Economic Development) (Amendment) Regulations 1992, have higher levels of unemployment than (a) Southampton and (b) Gosport; and if he will list them and their current levels of unemployment.

Mr. Robin Squire: Fifty-six local authorities were newly designated as scheduled authorities under the Local Government (Promotion of Economic Development) (Amendment) Regulations 1992, on the basis that each authority, in whole or in part, fell within a travel-to-work area with unemployment above the—narrow base—national average for England of 9·8 per cent. for the period from April 1991 to March 1992. Southampton city council and Gosport borough council did not fall within such a travel-to-work area. The scheduled authorities added by the regulations are:

Mr. Maclean: Yes.

Plant Standards

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set a timetable to ensure that all existing power stations and combustion plants operate according to new plant standards by 2000.

Mr. Maclean: Since 1 April 1991 all large combustion plants have been subject to integrated pollution control under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, and therefore to regulation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. When considering an application for authorisation HMIP is required to ensure the use of best available techniques not entailing excessive cost to prevent, or minimise and render harmless any releases. The precise timetable for the upgrading of existing plant, and the standards to be achieved, are matters for HMIP.

Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken by his Department to date upon the use of selective catalytic reduction upon levels of nitrogen oxide emissions; and what plans he has to support and fund the selective catalytic reductions initiatives in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Technologies for reducing nitrogen oxide emissions, including selective catalytic reduction, have been considered in two items of research commissioned by my Department; a general study of acid emission abatement technologies undertaken by the Fellowship of Engineering, and a report on nitrogen oxide abatement technologies for large combustion plants undertaken by DNV Technica. While I have no plans for funding or other specific support for the development of this technique, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is under a duty to keep such techniques under review for the purposes of part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to upgrade the United Kingdom plan to cut acid emissions.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom is already committed to substantial reductions in acid emissions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen. We continue to keep these plans under review in the light of both the developing scientific evidence of acid damage and the progress of negotiations, in which the United Kingdom is playing a full part, towards new international agreements for the control of acid emissions.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement upon the impact of the new EC action programme on the environment on Government support for the pollution control authorities in the dealings with plant operations.

Mr. Maclean: Among the many issues it addresses, the EC's fifth environmental action programme emphasises the importance of a scheme of integrated pollution prevention and control to regulate the operations of industrial plant. The European Commission is currently working on a proposal in this area. We introduced a scheme of integrated pollution control in the United Kingdom under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which came into force in April 1991 and is now being implemented by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. We therefore welcome the Commission's intentions.

Trees

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage the provision of trees in towns and community forests in England.

Mr. Maclean: The Government provide grant aid for planting, including grants from the Forestry Commission through the woodland grant scheme and the new community woodland supplement, and support from Task Force Trees—a special unit of the Countryside Commission which is allocating some £17 million in grant to replace trees in both urban and rural areas lost in the storms of 1987 and 1990.

We also provide assistance to voluntary and other bodies which are active in planting trees in towns and the urban fringe and fund an important programme of research and the provision of advice, placing emphasis on the practical care and maintenance of trees.

The Countryside Commission and the Forestry Commission are engaged in a joint initiative to create a number of community forests near major towns and cities. The Government have funded the establishment of project teams to explore means of implementing these forests and are currently considering proposed business plans for the three lead schemes: Thames Chase, Forest of Mercia and the Great North Forest.

Housing, Pendle

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the housing investment programme bids by Pendle district council to his Department and the HIP allocation for each year since 1982.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is given in the table. The figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are not directly comparable with those for earlier years because of the revisions to the capital finance system introduced in April 1990.

Notes:

[1] Allocations for the years up to and including 1989-90 are final allocations, i.e. the intial allocation plus any increases to the initial allocation made in-year. The allocations figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are the HIP allocations—housing annual capital guidelines plus specified capital grants—issued prior to the start of the financial year. These figures do not include any supplementary credit approvals issued during the year.

[2] Cash figures have been converted to 1992-93 price levels by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP market prices deflator.

[3] From 1990-91, under the new capital finance system, the HIP allocation is an assessment of relative need for housing capital expenditure rather than a directly borrowing approval. Borrowing approval is now conveyed by the single, all service, basic credit approval.

Diesel Engine Trains

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department takes to monitor the level of pollution produced by diesel engine trains.

Mr. Maclean: The Department does not monitor directly pollution produced by diesel engine trains. Diesel motors of all kinds contribute to ambient levels of smoke, sulphur dioxide and nitrogen dioxide in particular, and these are monitored in many places throughout the United Kingdom. Rail transport is estimated to contribute about 1 per cent. of total United Kingdom emissions of nitrogen oxides, and negligible proportions of total emissions of other major pollutants.

(DOE Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics No. 14, 1991: Tables 1.1-2, 1.7, and 1.9-10).

Squirrel Monkeys

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average cost, nationwide, of a licence to keep squirrel monkeys under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976.

Mr. Maclean: Such information is not held centrally.

Radon Gas

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment is he will state the amount of grant awarded by each local authority for renovation to reduce the risk from radon gas, and the total paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not collected by the Department.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reasons for the proposed reduction in planned spending by his Department under the "Environment" heading in 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Howard: This heading comprises a variety of spending programmes including new towns, the urban block, Property Holdings, Ordnance Survey and the Office of Water Services as well as environmental initiatives. Forecast outturn for 1992-93 and the revised provision for 1993-94 and 1994-95 are higher than in previous plans.

The year on year changes between 1992-93 and 1994-95 reflect a number of factors, including a change in the forecast of receipts from the disposal of new towns assets. Provision rises throughout the period on the environment, countryside and wildlife block of expenditure programmes within the overall "Environment" heading.

Housing Action Trusts

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the relevant appointing body for the members of the board of each housing action trust, and the rate of remuneration received by each member of such bodies.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 13 November 1992]: Members of the boards of housing action trusts are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment on the basis set out in schedule 7 to the Housing Act 1988 and are entitled to receive remuneration of £4,890 per year, based on an assumed time input of half a day a week.

Waste Water Treatment

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the most recent estimate of the total level of capital investment required to meet the EC Municipal Waste Water Treatment directive.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Following discussions with the Department, the National Rivers Authority, and the water industry, the Director General of Water Services made certain assumptions in order to make an estimate of the possible capital costs for England and Wales in his consultation paper, "The Cost of Quality", published in August. Work continues, however, to identify the obligations arising from the directive and associated costs with greater precision.

Land (Public Access)

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the public can find out where they have rights of access to private land as a result of tax concessions being granted to the owners in return for greater public access.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 November 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

The owner of land that has been conditionally exempted from inheritance tax is required to publicise the agreed public access arrangements. The extent of the publicity depends on the facts of each case. The owner will generally be required to take specific steps to publicise public access, for example by advertising the access arrangements in a local tourist office or town hall.

The appropriate heritage advisory agency, for example the Countryside Commission for scenic land in England, is able to supply information about public access to heritage land including conditionally exempt land, although land will not be identified as conditionally exempt. In addition, in England and Wales, a member of the public who wants information about public access in a specific area can contact the footpaths officer of the appropriate county council or national park authority. Details of footpaths and public access also often appear on maps and in commercial publications, particularly for major tourist areas.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Fairs

Mr. Olner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to adopt a more flexible application of the three times rule in relation to a company's participation in trade fairs in a particular national market (a) in general and (b) for the apparel and textile industry.

Mr. Needham: The general policy of the three times rule does incorporate a certain level of flexibility in that flag ship events—that is major prestigious shows focusing on important sectors—are supported on five occasions. This additional level of support is also available for events in Japan, North America and Germany, except that the latter two are restricted to three events within regions of those markets.

A review of the trade fairs support scheme is planned to take place during 1993. The results of that exercise will form the basis of a total review of the present policy.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the (i) current account and (ii) manufacturing trade balance was for the calendar year 1989 in (a) United Kingdom and (b) Germany.

Mr. Needham: The information is in the table.

Balances on current account and in manufacturing in 1989

£ billion

	Current account balance	Manufacturing balance
Germany	35·1	68·7

Notes:

1. All figures are on a balance of payments basis except the German figure for trade in manufactured trade goods, which is a crude balance.
2. Germany excludes eastern Germany.

Nuclear Processing

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of uranium and plutonium would be produced by reprocessing spent fuel from United Kingdom nuclear power stations under existing contracts with the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: [pursuant to his reply, 4 November 1992, c. 308]: The figure for the amount of plutonium arising from the reprocessing of spent fuels should have read eight tonnes.

EC Regional Development

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of EC regional development funding received by the United Kingdom has been spent within the United Kingdom assisted areas (a) in each year since 1984 and (b) in total since 1984.

Mr. Sainsbury: From 1984 to 1989 the European regional development fund—ERDF—grants were payable only in Northern Ireland, the assisted areas of Great Britain, and the remainder of the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Development Board of Rural Wales areas. Figures for the latter areas are not readily available, but would have comprised only a very small proportion of the United Kingdom's total allocation.

From 1989, eligibility for the ERDF has, with minor exceptions, been determined according to eligibility for objectives 1, 2 and 5b of the reformed structural funds. The great majority of the ERDF allocations resulting from these objectives go to Northern Ireland and the assisted areas, but figures on the exact proportion could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 November, Official Report, column 606, if he will list those areas in the United Kingdom that are (a) part of the United Kingdom's assisted areas map but do not qualify for EC regional development funding and (b) not part of the United Kingdom's assisted areas maps but which qualify for EC regional development funding.

Mr. Sainsbury: The areas in the United Kingdom that are assisted areas but do not qualify for EC regional development funding include: the whole travel-to-work-areas—TTWAs—of Cinderford and Ross-on-Wye, Corby, Kidderminster, and Whitby; and part of the TTWAs of Birmingham, Coventry and Hinckley, and Dudley and Sandwell.

The areas in the United Kingdom that are not assisted areas but qualify for EC regional development funding include: Northern Ireland; the whole TTWAs of Aberystwyth, Alnwick and Amble, Brecon, Burnley, Castleford and Pontefract, Camarthen, Chesterfield, Dolgellau and Barmouth, Inverness, Islay Mid Argyll, Keith, Llandeilo, Llandrindod Wells, Machynlleth, Mansfield, Newtown, Oban, Orkney Islands, Pendle, Retford, Shetland Islands, Thurso, Wakefield and Dewsbury, Welshpool, Whitehaven, Worksop; and part of the TTWAs of Alfreton and Ashfield, Edinburgh, Elgin, Goole and Selby, Manchester, Nottingham, and Stirling.

Development Funding

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much EC regional development funding has been spent in the Darlington travel-to-work area (a) in each year since 1984 and (b) in total.

Mr. Sainsbury: European regional development fund allocations to the Darlington travel-to-work area since 1984 have been as follows:

	£ Thousands
1986	348
1987	508
1988	225
1989	557
1990	617
1991	939
Total 1984 to 1991	7,590

The figures include allocations to projects which part fall outside the Darlington TTWA.

Economic Development Assistance

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each piece of legislation within the responsibility of his Department which bestows economic development powers or economic development assistance on local authority areas and which are based, in whole or in part, on statistics related to the relevant travel-to-work area.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Section 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 empowers my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to make grants in the assisted areas for the improvement of a basic service for which he is responsible. Local authorities would be eligible for such assistance. My right hon. Friend has no other powers bestowing such powers or assistance to local authorities in the manner described.

Export Credit Guarantee Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether prefabricated boxes made from steel mesh manufactured in Italy but in part assembled in the United Kingdom, and for the purpose of erosion protection for river banks and road embankments, are eligible for export credit guarantee finance, in respect of exports to African countries.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Export credit guarantee finance is provided to facilitate the supply abroad of goods and services by United Kingdom businesses. Depending on the details of individual cases, within strict limits foreign goods and services may also be financed.

If the hon. Gentleman has a particular transaction in mind he may like to write to me about it.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Key: My Department has only one agency, the Historic Royal Palaces Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. David Beeton, to reply to the hon. Member and I shall place a copy of his reply in the Library.

Letter from David Beeton to Mr. John McAllion, dated 12 November 1992:

I have been requested by the Minister to reply to your Written Parliamentary Question on this subject.

The Historic Royal Palaces Agency currently follows the health and safety policy of its previous parent Department —the Department of the Environment—of which it was a part until it was transferred into the new Department of National Heritage in April this year. A copy of the DOE's policy statement is attached.

The Agency is now developing its own health and safety policy in consultation with the Department of National Heritage with the aim of finalising it in the new year.

I understand that the Minister is arranging for a copy of this reply to be placed in the Library of the House.

The policy statement has been placed in the Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage has only one executive agency, the Historic Royal Palaces Agency, HRPA. This was considered for privatisation and contractorisation in the normal way when it was set up. Its framework document is currently being reviewed in accordance with the usual procedures under which agency framework documents are considered every three years. The HRPA will continue to contract out a proportion of its services in line with Government policy.

BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what have been the financial allocations to the BBC Scottish symphony orchestra in each of the past seven years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: This is a matter for the BBC, within the terms of the present royal charter and licence and agreement.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what use his Department has made of private detectives since its inception; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Key: My Department has not used the services of a private detective.

SCOTLAND

Dentistry

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dental checks were carried out in Scotland (a) in each of the three years preceding the withdrawal of free dental checks in the NHS and (b) in each year since then.

Mr. Stewart: Charges for dental examination were introduced on 1 January 1989. The figures available on the number of dental examinations carried out in Scotland in each of the years in question are contained in the table. The figures from 1 October 1990 are for adults only, as under the new dental contract introduced from that date children are now treated under capitation arrangements to provide continuing care, and information is not recorded separately on individual treatment items such as examinations for children. The number of children registered with a dentist under these arrangements for the periods since October 1990 is shown separately in the table.

Million

Year	Number of examinations	Number of children registered October 1990 onwards
1987	2·64	n/a
1988	2·67	n/a
1989	2·69	n/a
1990 January to September	1·96	n/a
1990-91 October to March[1]	0·95	0·47
1991-92 April to March[2]	1·90	0·63

[1] New contract for general dental services introduced on 1 October 1990.

[2] With effect from 1 April 1991 the method of collecting statistical information was changed to reflect financial years.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now reverse the decision to withdraw free dental checks in the NHS.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no plans to reintroduce free NHS dental examinations.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will withdraw the draft regulations aimed at clarifying the existing statutory framework for compulsory competitive tendering issued on 16 June to local authorities, and amend them accordingly, following the Government's acceptance of the EC's acquired rights directive;

(2) whether the EC acquired rights directive will be applied retrospectively to all contracts awarded externally by Scottish local authorities under compulsory competitive tendering legislation; and what is his estimate of the number of workers involved in such contracts to date;

(3) what provision is made under the EC acquired rights directive for reinstatement of former pay and conditions to former local authority employees who have been transferred to the private sector under compulsory competitive tendering legislation, and who have suffered a reduction in pay or conditions as a result;

(4) what advice he will provide to Scottish local authorities and other public bodies to enable them to inform interested parties fully in the compulsory competitive tendering process of the implication of the Government's acceptance of the EC's acquired rights directive.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no plans to withdraw the consultation paper issued on 16 June 1992 which contained detailed proposals for the content of regulations and guidance to clarify the framework for compulsory competitive tendering. The consultation paper reflected our view that it would be most unusual for the provisions of the directive to apply to a normal contract let under the compulsory competitive tendering legislation. Responses to the consultation paper, including those relating to this particular point, will be carefully considered before the regulations and guidance are finalised. The interpretation of the law in its application to the individual case is, however, a matter for the courts.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of former public sector employees in Scotland transferred to the private sector under compulsory competitive tendering legislation; and what proportion of these workers come under the EC's acquired rights directive.

Mr. Stewart: Information about the number of former public sector employees in Scotland who are now employed in the private sector following the award of contracts under compulsory competitive tendering legislation is not held centrally.

Commissioner for Local Administration

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to extend the jurisdiction of the Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland to those local authority services and statutory responsibilities which are transferred to private companies or other bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Although the Commissioner has no jurisdiction over the activities of private companies or other bodies undertaking local authorities' statutory duties or other services, the ultimate responsibility for the provision of such services remains with local authorities. Where a local authority has a statutory duty to provide a service, it cannot divest itself of that duty. It is therefore not necessary to extend the jurisdiction of the Commissioner to cover these circumstances. The Government will continue to review the Commissioner's powers in the light of any new factors which arise.

Nursing and Midwifery Students

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nursing and midwifery students obtained posts in each health board area in each year since 1987; and if he will make a statement regarding the estimated level of such employment, assuming both volume and percentage changes.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 November 1992]: The exact information requested is not available centrally. The table, however, gives a broad indication of the underlying trends, assuming that qualification rates stay constant, of the number of final year pre-registration nursing students finding direct employment in the NHS in Scotland within the year of qualifying. Final year students in post at a census date are shown classified by their status one year later. It should be noted that the methods by which this information is collected do not permit account to be taken of certain students, for example those who have been unable to complete their training within the normal three year period; those who, having qualified, may have chosen to have a break in service before seeking employment; those who have found employment as a nurse outwith the NHS; and those who may have qualified, joined the NHS and left within a census period. Those who qualify and work occasionally in the NHS,—for example, bank or agency nurses—also cannot be identified and have therefore been counted with the "not employed" category.

Comparable information on post-registration midwifery students is not available.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 November 1992]: A review of the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984 is presently taking place. A consultation paper was recently issued proposing some changes to the conservation régime including the provisions on sea loch and seasonal closures. WALES

Genetic Screening

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library details of the regional and sub-regional genetic screening service in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place in the Library of the House details of the genetic screening services offered by the regional medical genetics centre at the University hospital of Wales. Details of district and sub-regional services are not held centrally.

Cadw

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of Cadw's health and safety policy.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments under its chief executive, Mr. John Carr. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. A. J. Carr to Mr. John McAllion, dated 17 November 1992:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to the recent Parliamentary Question in which you asked if he would place a copy of Cadw's Health and Safety Policy in the Library of the House.

The framework document for the Agency delegates to me responsibility for ensuring the health and safety of its staff and the public who are affected by its work. We have not, however, adopted a policy separate from that of the Welsh Office's written statement setting out its approach to health and safety.

I enclose a copy of that statement.

Community Charge

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what is his estimate of the total amount of poll tax arrears in Wales; and if he will give the breakdown for each district authority at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) on 5 November 1992, at column 377.

Conwy Tunnel

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to undertake improvements to the landscape and highway hardware on and around the A55 approaches to the new Conwy tunnel.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Landscaping and other works at the Conwy tunnel approaches have been carried out in accordance with the planned proposals; no further works are currently anticipated other than regular maintenance.

Child Psychotherapists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the number of child psychotherapists employed within the NHS in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As at 30 September 1992 there were three—whole-time equivalent of 1·5—child psychotherapists employed within the NHS in Wales.

Teacher Training Colleges

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to reform teacher training colleges.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have already announced the changes to be made to the initial teacher training of teachers for secondary schools. The main thrust of these reforms is that schools should play a much larger part in initial teacher training as full partners of higher education institutions.

The target date for the reform of initial teacher training for primary teachers is 1 September 1994. Our aim is to make primary phase teacher training more school-based and more closely related to the needs of schools.

Educational Psychology Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the educational psychology service.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Educational psychology services are the responsibility of local education authorities. This will remain the case under the Education Bill. The Welsh Office makes grant available to LEAs for the initial training of educational psychologists. Expenditure of almost £200,000 is being supported in 1992-93.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on discretionary awards.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for discretionary awards for students rests with individual local education authorities. Each LEA will determine its own policies and expenditure on discretionary awards in the light of local needs and priorities.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in Wales have applied for grant-maintained status.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Three and six respectively.

Nursery Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will extend nursery education in Wales in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There is no statutory requirement to provide children under the age of five with schooling. The provision of education in school for children under five years old is at the discretion of local education authorities.

Pensioners

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will take to improve the quality of life of pensioners in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend's proposals for the improvement of the quality of life of pensioners in Wales are set out in chapter 11 of the White Paper "Caring for People—Community Care in the next Decade and Beyond", Cm 849, and in guidance issued subsequently to assist authorities in preparing for its full implementation. The social care plans for the implementation of community care for the elderly, drawn up by social services authorities in Wales, jointly with health and housing authorities and others, have the following key aims and objectives:

1. To do all that is practicable to enable elderly people to live in the home environment of their own choice.
2. To maintain and foster maximum independence, taking into account personal and coping skills.
3. To recognise the needs of family and other carers, and to provide them with necessary support.
4. To encourage participation in community life, by facilitating access to social, educational and leisure opportunities.
5. To provide information to enable individuals to make informed and realistic choices about services.
6. To promote opportunities for elderly people, and the carers of elderly people, to contribute to the design of services and to ensure that they are able to contribute to local policy and operational planning.
7. To respond to individuals' choice of service, while ensuring that good standards of care are maintained.
8. To stimulate the development of a wide and flexible range of services from a variety of providers, and to ensure cooperation and effective working by all concerned.
9. To increase public awareness of the needs and rights of elderly people.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many long-term unemployed there are in (a) Wales, (b) each of the travel-to-work areas in Clwyd and (c) Alyn and Deeside local authority areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The numbers of long-term unemployed in each of the areas requested are given in the table. The table shows unadjusted numbers of those unemployed for more than 52 weeks.

Live Music

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on promoting live music.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In Wales, Government support for the arts is provided through the Welsh Arts Council and regional arts asssociations, with the aim of encouraging quality and innovation in all art forms. In the current financial year total Welsh Arts Council spending on live music will be almost £4 million. The regional arts associations and local authorities also fund live music.

BBC Wales Symphony Orchestra

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the financial allocations to the BBC Wales symphony orchestra in 1982, 1988 and in the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The BBC Wales symphony orchestra receives financial support from the Welsh Arts Council. Grants were £226,487 in 1982, £396,050 in 1988 and £517,500 in 1991.

Truancy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has adopted to limit truancy in the primary and secondary schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Truancy is a serious matter. It undermines the educational process and contributes to the juvenile crime rate. Since August this year, maintained schools are required to publish their rates of unauthorised absence. This will enable us to establish the full extent of the problem and to consider what action the Department needs to take.

Small Firms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many small firms have gone out of business in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not available. However, VAT registration and deregistration figures, which mainly comprise smaller businesses, are available for each of the years in question and show a net addition of 9,600 VAT registered businesses in Wales for the period 1987-91, bringing the total number of VAT registered businesses in Wales to 86,700.

The number of VAT registrations and deregistrations in Wales for each of the last five years, and the resulting change to the stock of businesses, is as follows:

VAT Registrations	8,700	10,900	10,900	10,200	8,400	49,100
VAT Deregistrations	7,200	7,800	7,700	8,000	8,800	39,500
Change to stock of VAT-registered business	+1,500	+3,100	+3,200	+2,200	−400	+9,600

Hearing-impaired Pupils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy initiatives he has taken for the hearing impaired in the schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is the responsibility of local education authorities to identify, assess and make appropriate provision for children with special educational needs including those with a hearing impairment. The Welsh Office makes grant available to LEAs for the training of teachers, including teachers of the deaf.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those schools in Wales that exist for the hearing impaired.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Maintained special schools which are approved specifically for children with hearing impairments are Bryn Glas School, Mold, Clwyd and Ashgrove School, Penarth, South Glamorgan. In addition, there are pupils with a number of difficulties, including hearing impairment, in other special schools and some ordinary maintained schools have units which cater for those with hearing difficulties but details are not available centrally.

Orimulsion

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those locations in Wales where orimulsion is burned.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Orimulsion is not burned on a commercial basis in Wales at the present time. National Power plc has put forward proposals for the use of the fuel at Pembroke power station and these are under consideration by the relevant authorities.

Point of Ayr

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive the report and recommendations of the inspector resulting from the inquiry into proposed development at Point of Ayr by Hamilton Oil.

Sir Wyn Roberts: As soon as possible.

North East Wales TEC

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that the North East Wales Training and Enterprise Council Ltd. does not receive any public money towards its proposal to build new offices for its managing director and staff.

Mr. David Hunt: North East Wales TEC, in collaboration with the Welsh Development Agency, will be establishing a business development centre in Clwyd. The contribution which the TEC will make towards the cost of this Centre comes from operating surpluses it has been able to generate from the provision of training and enterprise programmes since its inception.

The business development centre will provide an effective "one stop shop" of information, advice and assistance to local businesses and a range of facilities including a lecture theatre, fully equipped training rooms, video conferencing facilities and exhibition space. It will also provide office accommodation for both the TEC and the WDA.

This integrated approach will help to stimulate the growth of the north-east Wales economy, making it easier for large and small businesses to access the help they need to develop and grow and to compete in domestic and overseas markets.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial contribution will be made to local authorities for supplementation to private nursing homes for the year beginning 1 April 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I announced on 2 October that £35·9 million would be made available to local authorities in Wales in 1993-94 in respect of all their community care responsibilities.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available in the Library copies of the responses he has received to the proposals on local government reorganisation set out in his statement to the House on 3 March, at columns 171-72.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes. I am placing in the Library of the House copies of the formal response submitted to me by the Welsh local authority associations, individual authorities and others, together with the reports prepared by the structures group and its sub-groups. These latter reports were prepared as advice for the Welsh consultative Council on Local Government and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Welsh Office or the local authority associations.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the reasons for the different treatment of Wales from that of England and Scotland in the proposed central Government support for local authorities in table 11 of the public expenditure plans announced on 12 November.

Mr. David Hunt: The levels of central Government support for local authority spending in Wales, England and Scotland reflect the decisions taken by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Scotland and myself, taking account of local government functional changes for 1993-94.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Pipers Crossroads, Moneyrea

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made for the scheme to widen the road at Pipers crossroads at Moneyrea; whether the land has been acquired for the scheme; whether the design work has been completed; and when he expects work to commence on site.

Mr. Atkins: The vesting order to acquire the necessary land will become operative next month; design work is at an advanced stage; and work should commence towards the end of the current financial year, subject to the availability of finance.

EC Finance

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the total sums which are identifiable as having accrued to the Northern Ireland budget from EC sources in each year since 1973.

Mr. Mates: Northern Ireland's largest single source of funding from the European Community is the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. The bulk of such receipts are disbursed centrally by the Intervention Board executive agency (IBEA) and details of those receipts are not maintained on a regional basis.

The following amounts, however, have been identified as receipts from the European Community's three structural funds:

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial contribution will be made to local authorities for supplementation to private nursing homes for the year beginning 1 April 1993.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will be making an announcement shortly on the additional resources to be made available by way of transfer from the social security vote to the budgets of the health and social services boards. Any further additional funds secured in the current public expenditure round will be announced in due course.

Health and Social Services Trusts

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what is the outcome of the current application for HSS trust status in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend, the Earl of Arran, has decided to approve the applications for trust status from the following units:

Belfast City hospital
Craigavon area hospitals group
Ulster, North Down and Ards hospitals
Green Park unit
Eastern ambulance service
Down and Lisburn unit
North Down and Ards community unit
North and West Belfast community unit
South and East Belfast community unit

The application from the Mater Infirmorum hospital has been deferred to allow the future role of the hospital to be clarified in the light of the Eastern health and social services board's current review of acute services.

The approved HSS trusts will come into operation on 1 April 1993, apart from the last four—community-based units—whose establishment is dependent on the passage of amending legislation and cannot therefore be before 1 April 1994.

Housing

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, for each district office of the Housing Executive, for each of the last six quarters, their waiting list broken down by category, the number of allocations by category, the longest period for which applicants had been A1 homeless and priority transfer and the average period spent in each of those categories by the respective applicants who were allocated houses.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 5 November 1992]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised that the available information is as follows:

Irish Languages

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will name the schools, public bodies and Government sponsored associations involved in the promotion of the Irish language; and how many individuals use these facilities.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 9 November 1992]: Details of the number of pupils studying Irish in individual schools are not available. However, on the basis of a 10 per cent. sample survey relating to those schools which offered Irish as a subject in the 1988-89 academic year, it has been estimated that 26,210 were studying Irish. Those schools are listed in the annex.

There are in addition two grant-aided primary schools which teach through the medium of Irish and an Irish medium unit in an English medium primary school with a total enrolment of 648 in September 1992.

The Arts Council of Northern Ireland provides grants for relevant projects and activities involving the Irish language—for example, in the fields of drama and literature. No information is available centrally as to the numbers participating in these activities.

The Ultach trust was established with Government support in 1989 to widen appreciation of the contribution which the Irish language makes to the cultural heritage of Northern Ireland and to increase knowledge of the language throughout the community. In 1991-92 Ultach supported 64 projects. No information is available centrally as to the numbers participating in these projects.

The origins of placenames project began on 1 October 1987 and involves a team of 5 academics located in Queen's university. The Project was assigned the following task by the Department of the Environment:

"to research the origin of all names of settlements and physical features in Northern Ireland appearing on the Ordnance Survey 1:50,000 scale map; to indicate their meaning and to note any historical or other relevant information. The project will enable an authenticated Irish language version to be provided for most of these names."

Currently the Training and Employment Agency's action for community employment scheme assists employment in six projects which promote the Irish language. Information on the number of individuals using these facilities is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The British Broadcasting Corporation local radio provision includes Irish-medium and bilingual Irish-English magazine programmes and schools programmes which support Irish teaching in English-medium schools.

A bilingual series and several Irish-medium and bilingual feature programmes have been broadcast on television. Information on the number of individuals using these facilities is not available.

In the financial year 1991-92 93 prisoners used the educational and translation facilities provided by the prison service.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Dip

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when training courses will be available to farmers on the dangers of sheep dip to human beings.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

Training courses for farmers on sheep husbandry tasks are available from the Agricultural training board, various agricultural colleges and other training organisations. The hazards of sheep dip and the health and safety precautions to take during sheep dipping operations are included in these courses.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those leaving youth training in 1991 in (a) Lancashire and (b) Pendle have found full-time employment within six months.

Mr. McLoughlin: Of those leaving youth training training providers in Lancashire in 1991, 51 per cent. found full-time employment within six months. Figures for Pendle are not available.

Earnings

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the gap between the earnings of Britain's highest and lowest paid in (a) 1962 and (b) 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information nearest to that requested is contained in table 15 of part A of the "New Earning Survey" for the years 1980, 1990 and 1992. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers currently receive less than £207·13 a week.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information closest to that requested can be found in table 14 of part A of the "New Earnings Survey 1992", a copy of which is in the Library.

Redundancies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies in the textile industry have taken place in (a) Lancashire and (b) the north-west region for each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is available only from the confirmed redundancies series that was discontinued from summer 1992. The number of confirmed redundancies recorded in the textile industry in Lancashire and the north-west region in each of the years 1979 to 1991 are given in the following table. Since spring 1992 the main source of data on redundancies has been the quarterly "Labour Force Survey" which provides a more reliable measure of the number of redundancies than the discontinued series, but does not provide the type of detailed analyses requested.

Year	Lancashire	North West Region
1979	2,061	5,124
1980	8,976	19,164
1981	2,630	9,003
1982	1,729	4,803
1983	782	2,837
1984	199	1,490
1985	26	1,134
1986	48	1,318
1987	231	952
1988	184	1,400
1989	938	1,959
1990	391	2,764
1991	942	2,482

Unpaid Probation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has to prohibit employers from offering unemployed people a period of unpaid probation on the basis of continuing to receive unemployment benefit and meal and travel allowances.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have no such proposals. Under our successful job interview guarantee a person unemployed for six months or more can try out a job with an employer for up to three weeks, with a guaranteed interview at the end of that period. In 1993-94 we intend to expand the number of these work trials arranged by the employment service to 20,000.

Health and Safety

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the cost of the market testing department in the Health and Safety Executive when it is fully staffed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The salary cost of the market testing section which the executive plans to have in place are expected to be around £180,000 in a full year at 1992 costs.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the cost of the consultant assisting the director general of the Health and Safety Executive in compiling his report on market testing; how he was appointed; and what was his previous occupation or employer.

Mr. McLoughlin: The consultant is a partner with Touche Ross and has extensive experience of market testing in the public sector, both in central and local government. He was appointed under HSE's normal procedures, following an invitation to tender and a personal interview. HSE followed the guidance on the ethics of conducting business with the private sector contained in the Treasury public competition and purchasing unit publication—CUP16 in appointing him. I regard his rate of remuneration as commercial in confidence.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the business case for the Health and Safety Executive FOCUS computer system will be placed in the Library and made public.

Mr. McLoughlin: The FOCUS business case is a working document prepared by the Health and Safety Executive for internal use to support the proposed introduction of the FOCUS computer system and not for publication.

Employment Training

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will raise the maximum age limit of the aim group for employment training.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employment training is open to unemployed people up to the age of 59 who meet the general eligibility conditions. However, those aged 50 and over do not fall within any of the categories of unemployed people who have priority for places. Under training for work, which is to replace employment training from April 1993, age will not be a factor in determining priority.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what percentage of the working population are on work-related Government training programmes in each region.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is shown in the following table:

Participants on work-related Government training programmes June 1992

Region	Work-related Government training schemes[1]	Percentage of civilian work force in employment
South East[2]	57,000	0·7
Greater London	29,000	0·8
East Anglia	8,000	0·9
South West	22,000	1·1
West Midlands	32,000	1·4
East Midlands	22,000	1·3
Yorkshire and Humberside	34,000	1·6
North West	46,000	1·7
North	32,000	2·6
Wales	20,000	1·7
Scotland	43,000	1·9

[1] Includes all participants on government training and employment programmes who are receiving some work experience on their placement but who do not have a contract of employment.

[2] Including Greater London.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what use her Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if she will list the firms involved.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Department group has not employed any private detectives in any of the last five years.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list for each training and enterprise council their total reserves at the end of the last financial year.

Mr. McLoughlin: All of the information requested has not yet been received from the training and enterprise councils and may not be received for some considerable time. I will write to my hon. Friend with the information as required.

Wages Councils

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) establishments and (b) employees were covered by wages councils in each standard region in (i) 1979, (ii) 1986, (iii) 1989 and (iv) 1991; and what percentage of the working population this represents in each region.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available estimates, which are for wages inspectorate divisions in 1989 and 1992, are given in the following table. I regret that data on a consistent basis are not available for 1979 and 1986.

(a) number of workers (000s)

Wages inspectorate division	1989	1992
Southern:
London	367	330
South East	268	275
East	233	253
South West[1]	318	360
Midlands	380	411
North West[1]	335	345
Yorkshire and Humberside	214	225
North	133	140

(b) number of establishments (000s)

Wages inspectorate division	1989	1992
Southern:
London	56	51
South East	41	43
East	36	39
South West[1]	49	56
Midlands	58	64
North West[1]	51	54
Yorkshire and Humberside	33	35
North	20	22
Scotland	34	35

[1] North Wales is covered by the North West Division and South Wales by the South West Division.

There are no estimates of the percentage which these figures represent of the working population in each of the wages inspectorate's divisions but about 10 per cent. of the Great Britain work force are employed in industries covered by wages councils.

TRANSPORT

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail on relaxation of the passengers charter with regard to the west coast main line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: New passengers charter performance standards for InterCity services, including those operating on the west coast main line, are at present being discussed by British Rail and the Department of Transport.

Rail Franchises

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many respondents to his consultation document on rail franchises expressed an interest in operating services.

Mr. Freeman: Thirty-five of those who have so far responded to the consultation document have expressed interest in operating services. In addition, several companies have told us that, although they were unable to meet the 12 November deadline, they would be registering an interest shortly.

Ports

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) capital investment and (b) other measures he plans to improve transport links to Britain's ports.

Mr. Norris: Many programmed motorway and trunk road schemes will improve access to ports, in particular planned schemes on the A2, M2, M3, A12, A20, M20, A259, A27, A580, A1033, and the M1-A1 link.

Airports

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the figures for cross-subsidy to Stansted airport from Heathrow and Gatwick airports over the last two years.

Mr. Norris: The revenue and operating profit or loss for each of the British Aiports Authority's airports is contained in the annual published accounts of BAA plc. In addition, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission undertook in 1991 a detailed examination of Heathrow Airport Ltd., Gatwick Airport Ltd. and Stansted Airport Ltd. Its report was published by the Civil Aviation Authority in July 1991 and a copy placed in the Library.

Roads

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will postpone all further consideration of a second A38 road crossing of the River Tamar until such time as a comprehensive cost-benefit analysis has established the relative economic and environmental advantages of current and proposed improvements to the A30 and A39 Atlantic highway.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All current and proposed improvement schemes in the road programme, including all those referred to in the question, are subjected to such analyses, and proceed only if they are justified.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made with (a) the Camelford bypass (b) Alliss to south Penlean, (c) the Stratton diversion, (d) the Kilkhampton bypass, (e) Clovelly cross to Seckington and (f) the Bucks cross improvement schemes for the A39 Atlantic highway; and what changes have taken place since his Department's south-west regional brief 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Progress on the preparation of these schemes has been made as resources have permitted. Compared with the position at October 1991 reported in the Department's south-west regional brief, current plans are:

Camelford bypass	Public consultation 1993
Allins to South Penlean improvement	Public consultation held 1992
Stratton diversion	Surveys under way for Public consultation 1994
Kilkhampton bypass
Clover Cross to Seckington improvement	Public consultation 1994
Bucks Cross improvement

M6

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest position in relation to the M6 widening proposals in the north of the Coventry, North-East constituency.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Preparation work is proceeding satisfactorily; we expect to be ready to consult the public on proposals for widening the length between the M1 and junction 4 towards the end of next year.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what targets or time scales he will apply to his Department under the citizens charter with respect to decisions on road construction projects.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The time taken to announce decisions on trunk road schemes after a public inquiry will depend on the complexity of the scheme and the weight and nature of the objections.

More generally, we are concerned about how long it takes to prepare major trunk road schemes. We have appointed consultants to review the statutory and administrative procedures involved and to recommend possible changes which might speed up the process.

Search and Rescue

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the civilian emergencies in each of the last six years attended by the search and rescue services.

Mr. Norris: From HM coastguard records, the numbers of incidents on the coast and at sea attended by the United Kingdom search and rescue services, including governmental and voluntary resources, for each of the last six years are as follows:

Year	Number
1987	5,563
1988	6,261
1989	6,835
1990	7,076
1991	7,212

West Highland Railway Line

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total subsidy paid to British Rail in 1991-92 for the operation of services (a) on the West Highland line and (b) specifically on the line to Oban; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The public service obligation grant is not allocated on a line by line basis. The total grant paid to British Rail in 1991-92 was £892 million.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representationss he has had regarding the future of rail services on the West Highland line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Petroleum

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safety regulations govern the transportation of petroleum by [illegible]; what plans there are to review the regulations; and [illegible] he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The regulations for transport of dangerous goods by road are made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Those affecting the transport of petroleum are:

The Dangerous Substances (Carriage of Dangerous Substances in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1992;

The Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations 1984;

The Road Traffic (Training of Drivers of Vehicles Carrying Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1992.

The Health and Safety Executive and the Department of Transport regularly review the regulations in the light of changes to international recommendations, developments in technology and practical experience.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents since 1982 involved the transportation of petroleum by road; if he will list the number of fatalities and injured; how many of those accidents occurred in residential areas; and if he will list the number of fatalities and injured in those areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information is not available in the form requested. There have been three fatalities and few serious injuries resulting from the transport of petroleum by road since 1982. There were 440 reported incidents of overturning or other serious damage, release of product of fire involving road tankers carrying all types of dangerous substances from 1982 to 1991. Incidents occurring in residential areas cannot readily be separately identified.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents since 1982 involved the transportation of petroleum by rail; if he will list the number of fatalities and injured; how many of those accidents occurred in residential areas; and if he will list the number of fatalities and injured in those areas.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate has a record of all reported freight train accidents.

The inspectorate is aware of five serious accidents during this period involving petroleum trains, none of which gave rise to death or major injury.

Noise Insulation Grants

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in deciding whether schools should be eligible for noise insulation grants when they are in close proximity to airfields; and when he expects to make an announcement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A number of issues raised by the draft report of the sub-group of the land compensation working party have to be resolved. It is hoped that an announcement will be made shortly.

British Rail (Freight)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made with the Government's plans for the sale of British Rail's freight businesses to the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The privatisation of British Rail's freight businesses requires primary legislation. Subject to enactment of that legislation, we intend that privatisation will commence in 1994. We are aiming to announce preferred options for the restructuring of the freight businesses prior to privatisation in the first part of next year.

Passenger Rail Services

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with interested parties regarding the Government's plans for the franchising of passenger rail services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is considering responses to the consultation document issued on 12 October, and will be having discussions with some of those respondents. I shall be visiting Scotland next month as part of my national programme of presentations on our proposals for privatising British Rail.

Road Accidents (Summer Time)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has on the connection between the ending of British summer time and traffic accidents and casualties, with particular reference to children.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Detailed estimates, by the Transport Research Laboratory, of the casualty savings that would accrue from a change to the present summer time regime are contained in paragraphs 26 to 43 of the 1989 Home Office document "'Summer Time'"—A Consultation Document". Copies of this are available in the House Library.

The estimates of the casualty savings that would accrue from a single double summer time regime have been updated to take account of 1991 casualty data. This indicates a saving of 140 fatalities, 520 serious injuries and 1,200 slight injuries, many of which would be child casualties.

Chelmsford/A12 Bypass

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the emergency telephones on the Chelmsford/A12 bypass to be erected and in operation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 16 November 1992]: The telephones are currently being installed and should be in service early next month.

Heavy Goods Vehicle Instructors

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to operate a scheme for registration of heavy goods vehicle instructors along the lines of his scheme for driving instructors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 16 November 1992]: I have no such plans. All large goods vehicle candidates must already have passed a car driving test and then face the very demanding LGV driving test. There is no clear road safety evidence to justify further regulation.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what qualifications he considers suitable for HGV instructors; how they differ from driving instructors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 16 November 1992]: My Department does not set qualifications for LGV driving instructors beyond requiring that they hold a full licence for driving the category of vehicle. The Driving Standards Agency is, however, preparing an official learner syllabus for LGV drivers which will help trainers and trainees alike.

School Buses

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 160, when he completed the review of the Carrying Capacity Regulations 1984 and associated regulations regarding the permissibility of three children aged under 14 travelling on a double seat as referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), 25 June, Official Report, column 273; and what are the reasons underlying the decision not to change the regulations.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 16 November 1992]: We are continuing to review these regulations. For the present, as I said in my reply of 3 November, I have no plans to amend the regulations.

Commuter Services

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to divert sufficient amounts of the proposed increased investment by British Rail to modernise commuter services to and from London, including the Fenchurch street line to Southend.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail to set priorities for investment within the resources at its disposal.

BR is currently reviewing its priorities in the light of the autumn statement and I will write to my right hon. Friend in due course.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

India

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the text of the extradition treaty with India he signed on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The extradition treaty between the United Kingdom and India was signed on 23 September 1992 and copies placed in the Libraries of both Houses on that date.

Baltic States

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Russian Government regarding its cancellation of troop withdrawals from the Baltic states.

Mr. Hogg: The Russian Government have suspended rather than cancelled withdrawals from the Baltic states. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised the matter with President Yeltsin during their talks in London on 9 November, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed it with the Russian Foreign Minister on 10 November.

Publicity Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total spending in Britain by the European Commission and its agencies on information, public relations and publicity in 1980 and 1990.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Details of the information and publicity budgets of institutions are set out in the EC general budget. This is published in the Official Journal, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The Commission and other EC institutions do not specify what proportion of their information budgets are spent in each member state.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Kaliningrad

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on levels of military deployment within the Kaliningrad region of the Russian Republic.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Kaliningrad region of the Russian republic contains the headquarters of the Russian Baltic fleet. We understand that there are at least 30,000 ground forces, as well as significant numbers of aircraft of the Russian naval air force and the Russian air force based there. Kaliningrad is a significant staging-post for Russian ground troops withdrawn from Germany and Poland.

Hong Kong

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for economic, political and democratic growth in Hong Kong as outlined in the Governor's speech last month to the Legislative Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government fully endorse the economic, social and political policies for Hong Kong set out in the Governor's address to the Legislative Council on 7 October.

The economic prospects of Hong Kong are very encouraging. Hong Kong's projected annual GDP growth between now and 1997 is expected to average 5 per cent. in real terms. The growing economic co-operation between the territory and southern China has enabled Hong Kong to benefit from the remarkable rates of growth in China in recent years.

The best way to protect Hong Kong's prosperity and stability in the years ahead is to maintain the territory's way of life. The Governor made a number of proposals in his speech aimed at making the administration of Hong Kong more effective and broadening the participation of Hong Kong people in running their own affairs. We consider that these proposals are consistent with the joint declaration and the basic law. The Governor has made clear that he is willing to consider alternative proposals if these meet the requirement of being open, fair and commanding widespread support in Hong Kong.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Hong Kong citizens have applied for United Kingdom passports; what is the likely proportion that will be granted passports; and how many dependants are likely to attach to each passport granted.

Mr. Goodlad: Some 66,511 Hong Kong residents have applied to date for British citizenship in the first phase of the British nationality scheme under the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990. About 39,418 of them are expected to be successful in their application.

Present indications are that the principal beneficiaries each have two dependants on average.

Iraq

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the documents made available in the Matrix Churchill court case, he will make further inquiries into the circumstances of the death of journalist Jonathan Moyle in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As I told the House on 21 January 1991, we have previously looked into media reports that Mr. Moyle may have come across information about Chilean arms sales to Iraq, but we have no evidence to substantiate this.

Mr. Jonathan Moyle's tragic death is still under investigation by the Chilean authorities, and the British Embassy in Santiago remains in touch with those authorities.

Bosnia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of any formal or informal agreement reached by EC ministers for EC member states to receive families from Bosnian detention camps this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This question was discussed at the EC Foreign Affairs Council on 9 November but no agreement, formal or informal, was reached. We have offered to accept 150 (plus dependants) in the first instance and are looking at what more we can do. We understand that EC partners have made similar offers.

Public Works Contracts

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the dates on which regulations equivalent to the Public Works Contracts Regulations 1991 were enacted or came into force in each other EC member state.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The material requested is not held centrally and will need some time to be collected. I will provide as full a response as I can as soon as possible.

Wilton Park

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the appointment of a departmental board for the Wilton Park executive agency; and whether targets have been agreed for the current year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Wilton Park departmental board was appointed earlier this year and held its first meeting on 23 October. I have agreed the recommendation of the board that the following key targets be adopted for this financial year:

to increase income from £790,000 to £876,000;
to recover 72·5 per cent. of costs;
to increase the overall number of Wilton Park conference participants from 720 to 860;
to reduce the average cost to the FCO of each participant from £426 to £387.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 9 November.

Mr. Hurd: I chaired the Foreign Affairs Council on 9 November. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and, on trade issues including GATT, my hon. Friend the Minister of Trade represented the United Kingdom.

There was a discussion of guiding principles on subsidiarity on the basis of a draft presidency paper. It was agreed that COREPER would report to the next meeting of the Council. There was discussion on how to introduce greater openness into the work of the Community following the discussion at the European Council in Birmingham. COREPER will take this work forward too.

Progress in ratifying the Maastricht treaty was discussed informally. The Danish Foreign Minister explained the Danish proposals. We as presidency agreed to liaise closely with the Danes and our other partners to reach agreement on a framework for a solution at Edinburgh. I reiterated the Government's commitment to securing the passage of the European Communities (Amendment) Bill in order to permit the United Kingdom to ratify the Maastricht treaty.

There was a further discussion on the Community's finances, based on outline conclusions tabled by the presidency and on a presentation by the President of the Commission.

The Commission reported on recent negotiations with the United States on GATT and oilseeds. The Council urged the Commission to resume negotiations with the United States and warned that United States unilateral action could lead to a retaliatory spiral. The Council emphasised the vital importance of early action by both sides to avoid this.

The Council welcomed the Commission's opinion on Finland's application to join the Community. It was agreed that this should be considered as part of the preparations for enlargement negotiations with the EFTA countries.

The right hon. and noble Lord Owen briefed Ministers on recent developments in the former Yugoslavia. Ministers had a wide ranging discussion of the crisis, including the plight of released detainees. They agreed to continue work on tightening sanctions on Serbia and Montenegro.

An EC/Turkey Association Council took place in the margins of the Council. The Council agreed on a new political dialogue arrangements with Turkey, including meetings at the highest level and regular meetings at Foreign Minister level.

Korea

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit by their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to the Republic of Korea.

Mr. Goodlad: Their Royal Highnesses were the guests of President Roh Tae Woo. The Korean Government and people gave them an extremely warm reception as a mark of the esteem in which they and Britain are held in Korea. Their Royal Highnesses undertook a very busy schedule which involved meeting many distinguished and influential Koreans. Their visit provided an excellent base from which to develop further the already good bilateral relations which exist. Their Royal Highnesses attended a number of major commercial promotions, several sponsored by the Department of Trade and Industry. Their presence provided a unique opportunity for British companies to demonstrate their commitment to the market, and to raise the profile of British business and technology in South Korea's growing economy.

PRIME MINISTER

Security Service

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements he intends to make for parliamentary scrutiny of the Security Service and the secret intelligence service.

The Prime Minister: As I explained to the hon. Member on 13 May 1992, Official Report, column 103, the security and intelligence services are all subject to close ministerial oversight, and the Ministers are responsible to Parliament. There is now also a Commissioner for the Security Service who produces an annual report to Parliament, and a tribunal for those who have grievances. There will be an opportunity for Parliament to debate such matters when legislation is brought forward.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 17 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Prime Minister whether it is customary for decisions made in Cabinet Committee to be relayed to Members of the Cabinet who have not attended that meeting.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Not in all cases. The procedures for Cabinet committees are set out in paragraph 4 of the "Questions of Procedure for Ministers," which is available in the Library.

EDUCATION

Governing Bodies

4. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a further statement on the corporate status of governing bodies of schools.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill includes provision for the incorporation of governing bodies of LEA-maintained schools.

Teachers' Pay

11. Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what factors he will take into account when considering the recommendations from the School Teachers' Pay Review Body.

Mr. Patten: I set out in my letters to the chairman of the school teachers' review body dated 24 July and 12 November the considerations which should inform their recommendations for teachers' pay and conditions of service in 1993-94. Copies are in the Library.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on teachers' pay.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has asked the school teachers' review body to make recommendations on teachers' pay and statutory conditions of service from April 1993. His letters to the chairman of the school teachers' review body dated 24 July and 12 November set out the matters on which he has asked for recommendations, and the considerations to which the review body is to have regard. Copies of both letters are in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received regarding performance-related pay for teachers and the scheme's proposed introduction.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received a small number of representations on the introduction of performance-related pay for school teachers. He has asked the school teachers' review body to recommend how the pay of all school teachers might be more closely related to their individual performance.

University Entrance (Cumbria)

13. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has available to him as to the proportion of sixth formers in Cumbria going on to attend university.

Mr. Forman: More than 1,200 students from Cumbria entered universities in Great Britain and polytechnics and colleges in England in 1990-91. This represented nearly 20 per cent. of the young adult population in Cumbria, and was very similar to national participation rates for that year.

Schools (Surplus Places)

14. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest Government estimate of the number of surplus places in schools in England.

Mr. Patten: We estimate that there are currently up to 1·5 million surplus places in England.

Grant-maintained Schools

12. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what provisions he has made in relation to the auditing of the accounts of grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: The governing body of a grant-maintained school is required to appoint qualified external auditors, which may include the Audit Commission, to audit the school's annual accounts. The Department has issued guidance on the form of an audit code for governors and auditors of grant-maintained schools. As for other Exchequer-funded bodies, grant-maintained schools are subject to the oversight of the Comptroller and Auditor General.

15. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of schools in England have had ballots on grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: Ballots have been held at 701 schools in England to date, that is around 3·5 per cent. of eligible schools. The sevenfold increase in ballots last month compared to October last year reflects the significant increase of interest following publication of the White Paper.

16. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from Blackburn about his proposals for grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received no representations from Blackburn about his proposals for grant-maintained schools.

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) secondary and (b) primary schools are now operating under grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: A total of 225 secondary schools and 53 primary schools are currently operating under grant-maintained status. A further 43 secondary schools and 21 primary schools have received approval.

24. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the contributions which can be made by grant-maintained schools in rural areas.

Mr. Forth: The advantages of grant-maintained status—for example, the ability of schools to manage their own affairs, their accountability to parents and the local community and not to a bureaucracy, and popularity with parents shown by the increased applications for places—apply equally to schools in rural as in other areas.

25. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what recent representations he has received about the future funding of grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: We have received a number of representations on the future funding of grant-maintained schools in the light of the White Paper. We aim to publish consultation papers on the arrangements for calculation of grant in 1993-94 and on the common funding formula before the end of the year.

26. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on changes in the resources for 1993-94 available for (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) local education authority schools.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend announced provision for grant-maintained schools for 1993-94 in his reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 12 November at columns 894-97.

Details of the Government's assumptions about the level of local authority recurrent spending in 1993-94, including spending on education, will be announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment later this month, along with other details of next year's local authority finance settlement.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what capital funding arrangements he is making for newly appointed grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: All new and existing grant-maintained schools are invited to bid for grant funding for capital projects in an annual bidding round. All bids are judged strictly on their merits and in the light of the funds available. Decisions on the bids received from schools for 1993-94 projects will be announced in the new year.

Grant-maintained schools' annual maintenance grant includes an element for minor repair work. Schools also receive a formula allocation of capital grant for longer-term repairs and minor capital projects. In 1992-93 schools becoming grant-maintained in April received a full-year's formula allocation. Schools becoming grant-maintained in September received a proportion of their full-year allocation once incorporated. Schools can decide how to allocate this funding and are free to set their own priorities including the amount which they spend on repairs and maintenance.

17. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the funding available in the next financial year to finance pre-school education.

Mr. Forth: Details of the Government's proposals for next year's funding settlement for local authorities will be announced later this month. Within the framework of the settlement, individual local authorities are free to determine their own policies and expenditure on under-fives provision.

Sixteen-year-olds

18. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will state the total number of 16-year-olds expected to enter the labour market during this year.

Mr. Forman: The total number of 16-year-olds in England in the current academic year is 551,000, of whom some 397,000 are expected to be in full-time education at a school or further education college. The balance of 154,000 represents the number of young people expected to enter the labour market. A significant proportion of these are expected to be undertaking part-time education or training at a further education institution or on Government-sponsored youth training. The Government guarantee a suitable place on youth training for all 16 and 17-year-olds who are not in further education or employment.

School Buildings

20. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the funding available in the next financial year to repair school buildings.

Mr. Forth: We shall be allocating £660 million to support capital spending on school buildings in 1993-94. Local authorities will also benefit from the change my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced last week on the permitted use of capital receipts.

It will be for individual local education authorities to determine the level of their capital and recurrent spending on school buildings and their priorities.

Polytechnics and Colleges

21. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many of today's universities were polytechnics or colleges in 1979; and what this represents in student numbers.

Mr. Forman: Thirty-six institutions have received approval for university titles following the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. In 1990-91 about 342,000 students were studying at these institutions out of a total of about 1,150,000 higher education students in Great Britain. This represents nearly 30 per cent. of all higher education students in Britain.

Public Expenditure

22. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has had from teachers' unions on the Government's public expenditure plans for next year.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received a very small number of such representations.

Special Needs (Higher Education)

23. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the funding available in the next financial year to finance special needs education in higher education.

Mr. Forman: The total funding for higher education in England next year was announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 12 November. It is for the Higher Education Funding Council to decide how to distribute its total grant between institutions, taking account of the interests of those with special needs and other factors.

Access Courses

27. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received on the level of funding next year for access courses.

Mr. Forman: No such representations have been received.

Further and Higher Education

28. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what new initiatives his Department is proposing concerning access to higher and further education.

Mr. Forman: The Government's public spending plans, announced in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement to the House on 12 November, provide for a continuing increase in both higher and further education student numbers. In his initial letter to the Higher Education Funding Council for England, my right hon. Friend asked the Council to consider a range of access issues and we drew the Further Education Funding Council's attention to similar concerns in his launch letter to that council.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if students who entered universities recently converted from polytechnics will be classed as students entering universities or as students entering polytechnics, in official Department for Education figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The Department will continue to publish statistics on higher education students which adequately reflect the titles of the institutions those students attend. Discussions are currently in progress to establish statistical arrangements consistent with the new framework for higher education.

Law Students

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will introduce proposals to ensure that students following a law finals course receive a mandatory rather than a discretionary grant.

Mr. Forman: The Education Act 1962 restricts mandatory awards to full-time courses leding to a first degree or comparable qualification, or to the DipHE or HND, and to courses for the initial training of teachers. But the Act also allows for discretionary awards for most other courses, including the postgraduate law finals course. We have no present plans to move that boundary, which would require primary legislation.

Education, Support and Training Grants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much funding is available for the schools element of the grants for education support and training programme in 1992-93 and for 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: The grants for education support and training programme for 1992-93 supports some £377 million of expenditure in England, of which some £344 million will be for or associated with schools. The programme for 1993-94 will support some £320 million in England, of which some £314 million will be for or associated with schools. Grant is generally paid at 60 per cent. of expenditure.

Part-time Courses

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will bring forward proposals to ensure that courses of study at educational establishments of no more than 20 hours weekly are designated as part-time study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: Decisions on the appropriate number of hours of study for individual courses, and on whether a course should be designated as full or part-time, are for individual institutions.

Harris City Technology College, London

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils at the Harris city technology college, south London, were in the year group taking GCSE in the summer of 1992; how many of them achieved a GCSE pass at either grade A or B in (a) technology, (b) mathematics, (c) French, (d) German, (e) history, (f) geography, (g) single science and (h) design and communication.

Mr. Forth: There were 117 pupils in the year group YG11 at Harris city technology college, London, taking GCSE in the summer of 1992. The number of pupils achieving a GCSE pass at grades A or B for these subjects are as follows:

> (a) technology, 0 (b) mathematics, 2 (c) French, 0 (d) German, 0 (e) history, 1 (f) geography, 1 (g) single science, 1 and (h) design and communication, 0.

In providing comparative information about examination results on a national and local basis GCSE results are to be banded to show passes at grades A to C and A to G. At Harris CTC, GCSE A-C grade passes in all subjects totalled 342, including 11 in single science and 147 in double science. Of schools in the London borough of Croydon, Harris has the second biggest improvement in the number of children getting five or more A to C passes at GCSEs in 1992, a 15 per cent. increase over last year. The pupils taking GCSE in 1992 were formerly pupils at the Sylvan high school on the same site. The average number of A to C passes this year was 2·92 per pupil compared with the best average at the Sylvan school of 1·54.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what (a) Government and (b) private sector financial support was received by Harris city technology college, south London, in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Forth: Recurrent funding for city technology colleges is provided by grant direct from the Department of Education. The amount of Government grant for Harris city technology college in the academic year 1990-91 was £2·939 million and in the academic year 1991-92 was £3·107 million. As for all other schools, any additional funding by private sector sponsors for recurrent expenditure purposes is a matter for the schools and sponsors concerned.

Schools (Opt-out Ballots)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) maintained and (b) voluntary-aided (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools there are in each local authority area; how many have balloted on the question of opting out; how many votes were in favour of opting out; and what is the percentage of pupils in the local authority area that that figure represents.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on Friday 6 November, Official Report, columns 478-87. The additional information requested could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Forman: None.

Funding

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the level of the central funds provided for education to each (a) local education authority and (b) self-governing school per pupil in each age group in each year since 1989.

Mr. Forth: Central Government support for local authorities is virtually entirely through general grant, which is not hypothecated to particular services such as education. Local authorities are thus free to determine their own spending priorities.

Grant-maintained schools receive the bulk of their recurrent funding through annual maintenance grants, which are recouped in full from the former maintaining education authority. None of the special purpose and capital grants which grant maintained schools receive from central Government are allocated on the basis of pupil age ranges.

School Action Plans

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education from whom he intends to seek advice when monitoring action plans for schools and the progress of their implementations as proposed in the Education Bill.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend will seek the advice of Her Majesty's chief inspector.

Engineering Places

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many engineering places in advanced education have been available in each of the last five years; and how many were unfilled.

Mr. Forman: The Universities Funding Council—UFC—and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council—PCFC—have distributed recurrent funding on the basis of funded numbers or places. But these funded numbers do not necessarily reflect the total number of available places, as additional students may be recruited on a "fees-only" basis. Data on the total number of engineering places which institutions wish to make available each academic year are not collected by the Funding Councils.

Data which are available on funded places and enrolments—full-time equivalents—home and EC students—in engineering and technology are given in the table.

	Universities (GB) in UFC sector		PCFC sector (England)
Academic year	Funded places	Enrolments	Funded places	Enrolments
1990-91	37,687	36,927	34,686	36,316
1991-92	36,715	39,816	34,839	42,028

Access Funds

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy that access funds should be available to students who do not already have student loans.

Mr. Forman: Access funds are intended to help students who face severe financial difficulties after availing themselves of all other public sources of support. We have given guidance to institutions that they should not make payments from the access funds to students who are eligible for a student loan but who have not taken one out, unless there are exceptional circumstances.

Maintenance Grants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what monitoring his Department carries out of delays by local authorities in issuing maintenance grant cheques to students.

Mr. Forman: The Department does not directly monitor the time taken by each of more than 100 individual local education authorities to assess and pay mandatory awards to well over half a million students in total. But we vigorously investigate any reports of delays by named authorities to ensure that they take whatever action is necessary to comply with their statutory duties and minimise hardship among students. We have given all authorities guidance on prompt grant payment, and the Audit Commssion has published proposals for future performance indicators in this field.

Funding Authorities

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will state the functions and duties that his proposed legislation (a) requires education funding authorities to perform and (b) which any Secretary of State may require them to perform; and on what basis payment of grant to them will be calculated.

Mr. Forth: Under the proposed legislation, as set out in the Education Bill introduced to Parliament on 30 October, the Funding Agency for Schools has the functions summarised below. Payments of grant by the DFE to the FAS will be calculated on the basis of forecasts of projected expenditure on both the grants that the funding agency must make to schools, and the agency's own running costs.

The Schools Funding Council for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

FUNCTIONS OF THE FAS

A. Functions of the FAS where no order has been made conferring responsibility for providing sufficient school places:

1. The FAS is to be responsible for paying annual maintenance grant to the governing bodies of all GM schools in England, the amount of which is to be determined by the Agency in accordance with regulations made by the Secretary of State.

2. Regulations may provide for the payment by the FAS of capital and special purpose grants to the governing bodies of GM schools.

3. The FAS is to be responsible for paying grant to the new GM governing body of a school acquiring GM status in respect of any expenditure incurred by them up to the date of implementation of the proposals where it is incurred for the purpose of, or [illegible] connection with, the transition of the school to GM status.

4. The FAS is to have power to pay grants to the governing body of any GM school which is being discontinued where it is for the purpose of discharging any of the liabilities of the governing body or for meeting any of the costs of the winding up.

5. The FAS is to have similar grant paying functions to those referred to in paragraphs 1 to 4 above in relation to schools conducted by education associations.

6. The FAS is to be under a duty to provide the Secretary of State with such information or advice in connection with any of his functions relating to the provision of education as he may from time to time require. It is also to have the power to provide the Secretary of State with such information and advice as it thinks fit.

7. The FAS is to be under a duty to make such reports and returns, and to give such information, to any LEA as the authority may require for the purpose of its functions.

B. Functions of the Secretary of State in relation to the GM sector which he may transfer to the FAS.

8. The Secretary of State may by order transfer to the FAS (either generally or in specified circumstances) the following of his functions in relation to the GM sector—

(a) the making of new instruments of governments and their modification, and the making and variation of articles of government;

(b) the function of determining proposals by a governing body significantly to change the character or enlarge the premises of a GM school;

(c) the power to authorise the transfer of a GM school to a new site;

(d) the function of determining proposals by a governing body to discontinue a GM school;

(e) the power in certain circumstances to vary trust deeds relating to GM schools; and

(f) the power by order to make such provision as appropriate in connection with a school's transition to GM status.

C. Additional functions of the FAS where an order has been made conferring responsibility for providing sufficient school places.

9. Where at least 10 per cent. of pupils educated in maintained schools (other than special schools) are educated in the GM sector, the Secretary of State may make an order the effect of which is to place a duty on the FAS, as well as the LEA, to secure the provision of sufficient school places. The functions set out below are exercisable by the FAS where such an order has been made.

10. The FAS is to have the power to propose the establishment and discontinuance of GM schools, after consultation with such persons as appear to it to be appropriate. The Secretary of State must approve proposals to which objections have been made, or which he has "called in" or if the proposals name a sponsor of the school. The FAS is also to have the power to propose that a significant change in character, or significant enlargement of the premises, be made to a GM school.

11. The FAS is to have the power to direct that the approved admission number of a GM school be increased. The function of the Secretary of State in approving variations to the admission number proposed by the governing body of a GM school also transfers to the FAS.

12. The Secretary of State may make regulations requiring the FAS to provide him and LEAs with such information as may be prescribed relating to the provision of education in a LEA area for which they have responsibility. The FAS is to compile such information, and to make such provision for conducting, or assisting in the conduct of research, as is necessary for the purpose of providing the information required under the regulations.

13. Where at least 75 per cent. of pupils educated in maintained schools (other than special schools) are educated in the GM sector (or at least 10 per cent. of pupils are so educated and the LEA requests the order to be made), the Secretary of State may make an order the effect of which is to impose on the FAS the sole responsibility for securing sufficient school places in the LEA's area. Where such an order is made, as well as the functions referred to in paragraphs 10 to 12 above, the power of the LEA to direct a child's admission to a specific school also transfers to the FAS.

HEALTH

Treatment Purchases

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those health authorities which have decided to cease purchasing categories of treatment in total or for particular groups of patients; and if she will give details of the categories of treatment concerned.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Family Planning Service

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to expand the domiciliary family planning service in order to meet the targets regarding the reduction of teenage pregnancies and the incidence of sexually transmitted disease and invasive cancer of the cervix set out in the White Paper. "The Health of the Nation";

(2) what guidance she will issue to health authorities and trusts regarding domiciliary family planning services in the light of the care in the community proposals.

Mr. Sackville: The day-to-day management and provision of family planning services is a matter for individual health authorities since they can best judge local circumstances and needs. New guidelines issued by the National Health Service Management Executive in January 1992 include advice on targeting services and the service accessibility. Attention is drawn, with reference to earlier advice—family planning memorandum of guidance (HSC(IS)32)—to the way in which domiciliary services can be used to improve take-up among those people with special needs.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list those health authorities which provided domiciliary family planning services in each year since 1985;

(2) how many health authorities and national health service trusts in the United Kingdom currently provide domiciliary family planning services.

Mr. Sackville: The table lists those district health authorities that reported making at least one family planning domiciliary visit in one of the years 1988-89 to 1990-91. Figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Districts not listed showed no domiciliary visits during the period.

Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric beds were available in England and Wales for the most convenient date in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) 1992; and what is her estimate of the number available for each of the next three years.

Mr. Yeo: In 1970 there were 123,219 beds allocated for use in the psychiatric specialties. The corresponding numbers for 1980 and 1990-91 were 87,396 and 55,239 respectively.

The number of psychiatric beds available in the next three years will depend on the volume of in-patient psychiatric services purchased by health authorities.

Information relating to Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) in-patients and (b) day patients were waiting for hospital treatment on 30 September in each region and, of these, how many had been waiting for (i) less than one year, (ii) between one year and two years and (iii) more than two years.

Mr. Sackville: Provisional waiting list figures for 30 September 1992 were published on 11 November in press release H92/381. A copy is available in the Library. More detailed waiting time information, including separate figures for in and day patients is given in "Hospital Waiting List, In-Patient and Day Cases", published every six months.

Repairs and Maintenance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated expenditure required to clear the backlog of repairs and maintenance in each district health authority and NHS trust in England.

Mr. Sackville: Tables showing the estimates for 1991, the latest available, have been placed in the Library.

Childhood Vaccination

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals her Department has further to promote the benefits of vaccination against each of the childhood killer diseases; and what initiatives exist better to target different groups of vaccine-refuser parents across the community.

Mr. Sackville: General practitioners, clinical doctors and nurses all play a major part in explaining to parents why immunisation is important. I am pleased to say that the most recent estimates from the public health laboratory service's "COVER" programme show 95 per cent. coverage of children aged 18 months for diphtheria, tetanus and polio immunisations, 91 per cent. at the same age for whooping cough, and 92 per cent. at 24 months for measles, mumps and rubella. In the White Paper "Health of the Nation" we have set a national target of 95 per cent. coverage by 1995 for all those immunisations. East Anglia region has already achieved that target for all diseases, and Oxford, South Western and Wessex regions have done so for all except whooping cough. The Department works closely with the Health Education Authority in providing full information on immunisation for health professionals and parents, and is funding specific research aimed at ascertaining why a very small number of parents do not have their children immunised, with a view to answering their questions and convincing them of the benefits of immunisation. The findings of that research should be available in the spring of 1993.

Health Authorities (Directors)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances pensions are paid to former members or non-executive directors of health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Members or non-executive directors of health authorities are appointed on a non-pensionable basis. They are therefore ineligible for membership of the national health service pension scheme.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new initiatives have been taken by her Department in the preventive treatment of osteoporosis during the period 1985 to 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Among many other measures we have emphasised the importance of adopting a healthy lifestyle including a good diet, regular exercise throughout life, the avoidance of smoking and excessive alcohol consumption, for example in the booklet "Your Health: A Guide to Services for Women". We have reinforced these messages recently in the White Paper "The Health of the Nation". We have encouraged the use of hormone replacement therapy—HRT—when appropriate, because timely intervention can often prevent further deterioration. In 1990 we funded the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists to set up a study group of international experts to look at HRT and osteoporosis, the findings of which were published by the college. We have supported the work of charitable bodies such as the National Osteoporosis Society to produce literature for doctors and patients, and we are currently part funding the society's new handbook for GPs and practice nurses. We have sponsored research by Professor John Kanis of the department of human metabolism and clinical biochemistry at the university of Sheffield into screening for postmenopausal osteoporosis, and by Professor Martin Vessey of the department of public health and primary care at the university of Oxford into a cost-effective analysis of HRT.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances NHS trusts may use taxi services instead of ambulances for transporting in-patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 16 November.

South West Surrey Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide details of the 1992-93 allocation per head of population made to South West Surrey health authority; and what additional funds have been made available to that authority since 1 April.

Mr. Sackville: Allocations to district health authorities are the responsibility of regional health authorities and the information about the funds allocated to them is not held centrally in this form. The hon. Member may wish to contact Professor Marion Hicks, the chairman of South West Thames regional health authority, for details.

Taxis

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will instruct NHS providers to contract taxi services only with those firms which operate a no-smoking policy.

Dr. Mawhinney: The model smoke-free policy set out in the joint Department of Health/Health Education Authority booklet "Creating Effective Smoking Policies in the NHS", indicates that smoking should not be permitted in NHS vehicles, including ambulances. The extension of this policy to non-NHS, contracted transport providers is a matter for local service purchasers.

Standards of Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities and health service trusts have applied to the British Standards Institution with expressions of interest in the BS 5750 standard.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally.

NHS Staff (Accommodation)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes she is making to the arrangements for disposing of surplus national health service staff residential accommodation.

Mr. Sackville: We are enhancing the national health service scheme to bring it into closer alignment with the statutory right-to-buy scheme under the housing Acts, and to improve the terms of sale to tenants. In particular, in calculating the discount on the sale price we are allowing health service organisations to take into account previous occupation by the tenant of other public sector accommodation. The new arrangements are set out in a guidance note which we have placed in the Library.

District General Hospitals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district general hospitals there are in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no agreed definition of a district general hospital. Acute hospital services may be provided to a district from a single site or multiple site general hospital facilities which may also be supplemented by specialist or single specialty hospitals. In 1990-91 there were 327 hospitals in England with 100 or more acute beds.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a list of those district general hospitals in England that do not have a specialist full-time accident and emergency consultant.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested.

Tomlinson Report

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her latest estimate of the cost of closure and rationalisation of hospitals contained in the report by Sir Bernard Tomlinson excluding improvements in primary health care.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Bernard's report is advice to the Government. No decisions have yet been taken on the closure and/or rationalisation of hospitals in London.

West Midlands Ambulance Service

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the response times for the ambulance service responding to 999 calls in the west midlands for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the table for the years 1987-88 to 1991-92. The figures for 1991-92 are provisional.

Ambulance response to emergency calls for west midlands ambulance authority

Year	Total emergency calls	Number with response within 7 minutes	Percentage where response within 7 minutes	Number with response within 14 minutes	Percentage where response within 14 minutes
1987-88	115,081	44,698	38·8	109,788	95·4
1988-89	117,387	50,468	43·0	111,499	95·0
1989-90[1]	66,944	32,782	49·0	55,563	83·0
1990-91	117,191	60,822	51·9	103,245	88·1
1991-92[2]	120,258	[3]87,120	[3]72·4	110,944	92·3

[1] Due to the industrial action in this period the figures for 1989-90 do not reflect the total activity in the year.

[2] Figures are provisional.

[3] Figures are based on response times within 8 minutes.

Private Care Homes

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial contribution will be made to local authorities for supplementation to private nursing homes for the year beginning 1 April 1993.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 2 October that £539 million would be made available to local authorities in England in 1993-94 in respect of all their new community care responsibilities.

Ambulance Service

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the published response times of the ambulance service to 999 calls are calculated by her Department.

Mr. Sackville: Response times are not calculated by this Department but are recorded locally and then submitted to the Department on an annual basis. The ambulance authorities and NHS trusts supply the Department with figures for the total number of emergency calls, and the numbers of these responded to within the target times.

The emergency response time is measured as the time between the receipt of a 999 call by ambulance control staff to the time of arrival of a fully equipped emergency ambulance and qualified crew at the scene of the incident.

Dentists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many items of service were provided by contractual dentists in each year since 1989.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 16 November 1992]: The information requested is given in the table:

General dental services (GDS)—England
Items of service

Year	Under 18s	Adults	Total
1988-89	20,968,540	58,119,870	79,088,410
1989-90	20,683,510	55,932,870	76,616,380
1990-91	19,114,484	70,460,387	89,574,871
1991-92	5,122,418	77,109,003	82,231,421

Note:

The data for each year are not comparable due to changes in the dental contract. Under the new GDS contract, introduced on 1 October 1990, most treatment for under-18s is undertaken under capitation and is no longer separately identified. For adults, the new fee scale subdivided many of the items of service.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Burt: I am arranging for a copy of the Department of Social Security's health and safety policy statement to be placed in the Library. There are no separate policy statements for the Department's agencies.

Social Fund

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund applications have been refused in the last 12-month period for which figures are available, for (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans; how many of these claims were later successful on appeal; and if he will provide separate figures for each district office.

Mr. Scott: District refusal figures for the period April 1992 to September 1992 are in the table. Information for earlier periods is in the Library. The information requested on social fund reviews is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people on low incomes in each region, for the last 12 months for which figures are available have applied to the social fund for help with essential food items; how many have (a) been refused and (b) been awarded either a grant or loan; and what measures his Department is taking to support claimants who have fallen into debt as a result of repaying loans for essential food items.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for social fund payments have been made in the local offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow in each of the months of the past year; and how many were (a) granted community care grants, (b) offered a crisis loan and (c) refused by the adjudication officers.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 16 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund applications in the local offices of Greenock and Port Glasgow.

From the inception of the Benefits Agency in April 1991, the former DSS offices of Greenock and Port Glasgow became Clyde Coast and Cowal District.

Applications to the discretionary part of the Fund, that is, for loans and grants, are decided by Social Fund Officers, rather than Adjudication Officers. Details of discretionary applications, grant awards, crisis loan offers and refusals for discretionary payments at Clyde Coast and Cowal District are provided in the Annex. I have given details for the past 12 months to September 1992, as these are the latest figures available.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of applications for social fund community care grants in the North Tees district in 1991-92; what is the projected number of applications for 1992-93; and if he will ensure that sufficient funding is available to meet any extra demand.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Peter Mandelson, dated 16 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund community care grants in the North Tees District.

The North Tees District received 8,436 applications for community care grants in 1991-92. Information for 1992-93 is not available as forecasts are not made at a district level. The community care grant national budget currently stands at £91 million, an increase of more than 35 per cent. since April 1991.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Diet

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's assessment of the weekly cost, in real cash terms, of maintaining a healthy diet; how many (a) families on low income with children under five years and (b) pensioners on low incomes, fall below deficiency levels for essential nutrients; and if he will subdivide these figures by region.

Mr. Burt: There is no single cost of a healthy diet. Diets can be constructed in a variety of ways and individual preferences vary. Information about nutrient deficiency in specific population groups is not available, but the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food national food survey does indicate that in general the diets of people in all income groups contain adequate levels of most nutrients but rather more fat and less fibre than the latest dietary recommendations. The welfare foods scheme continues to provide a nutritional safeguard for children under five in families with income support.

Wages Councils

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment his Department has made of the likely effects on his budget from the proposed abolition of the wages councils.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 11 November at column 817.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Miss Widdecombe: Privatisation and contractorisation of the Department's agencies are considered as part of each agency's three-year review. Where appropriate, an announcement will be made.

National Insurance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the increase in income to the Treasury would be in 1993-94 as a consequence of raising employees' national insurance contributions from 9 per cent. to 10·4 per cent.

Miss Widdecombe: The national insurance fund would receive about an extra £2·3 billion in 1993-94.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much per week an increase in employees' national insurance contributions from 9 to 10·4 per cent. would cost families with incomes of (a) £5,000, (b) £7,000, (c) £9,000, (d) £10,000, (e) £15,000, (f) £25,000, (g) £40,000 and (h) £100,000 in 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is set out in the table:

Annual earnings £	Weekly increase in contributions £
5,000	56 pence
9,000	1·64
10,000	1·91
15,000	3·25
25,000	5·10
40,000	5·10
100,000	5·10

Notes:

1. The table assumes one employee in each family working in one employment in 1993-94.
2. NI contributions are not paid by employees on earnings above the proposed annual upper earnings limit of £21,840.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of (a) employers' and (b) employees' national insurance contributions collected for each of the last 10 fiscal years expressed (i) in cash terms, (ii) at June 1992 prices and (iii) as a percentage of total Exchequer income.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table.

Back Pain

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many days of work were lost through back pain in each year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available.

Newspaper Articles

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what circumstances staff at his Department's offices are permitted to include newspaper articles in clients' files.

Mr. Burt: Current instructions provide that newspaper articles should be drawn to the attention of staff who have had dealings with that customer, although such articles should not be kept in customers' files. However, the Department is in the process of devolving responsibilities to its executive agencies in line with the Government's next step programmes. It will be for the chief executives of the agencies to decide whether they consider it appropriate or necessary to provide central guidance on such matters as the retention of newspaper articles in customers' files.

HIV

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to whom his Department circulated the statement concerning the agreement that compensation made from the Department of Health to fund non-haemophiliacs infected with HIV through blood or tissue transfers would not affect the entitlement of those individuals to benefits.

Mr. Burt: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary announced in the House on 18 February this year that the payments would be fully disregarded in the income-related benefits. All prospective applicants for a payment were sent a copy of the document describing the scheme which made specific mention of the social security provisions. A letter explaining these provisions in detail was issued to all recipients of a payment.

Old People's Homes

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of supplementation of the cost of elderly people in old people's homes and nursing homes for each year from 1980 to 1991 and the latest estimate for 1992.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is as follows:

We are committed under the Department's bilingual policy to produce further bilingual leaflets and forms. Indeed, we are striving to ensure that all new leaflets and forms will be produced in this way.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will be placed in the Library.

Heating Costs

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to ensure that pensioners on small incomes are assisted with heating costs during the winter months.

Mr. Scott: The Government's policy targets the available resources on those groups considered most vulnerable and least able to meet extra heating costs as a result of very cold weather. Cold weather payments are already issued automatically to all pensioners who get income support pensioner premium.

Students

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of students undertaking further education for no more than 20 hours' per week who have been denied income support on the basis that their 20 hours' study is designated as full-time education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: This information is not available. Students following a full-time course of education, irrespective of the number of hours they attend each week, should look to the educational maintenance system for the necessary financial support.

Whether a course is designated as full time or part time is a matter for the individual educational establishment. Unemployed income support claimants who take advantage of part-time education courses for up to 21 hours a week benefit from a valuable concession in the income support scheme. They are treated as available for work, but have to satisfy all other relevant provisions whilst continuing their search for work.

Welsh Language

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that the instructions accompanying all documents relating to claims and appeals within his Department are available in Welsh.

Mr. Burt: The provision of instructions which accompany documents relating to claims and appeals is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Gareth Wardell, dated 16 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about instructions accompanying all documents relating to claims and appeals being available in Welsh.

In May 1990 the Department of Social Security published its bilingual policy for Wales. In line with this the Benefits Agency set up a Welsh Language Unit with responsibility for implementing the policy.

One of the elements of the policy is that bilingual forms and leaflets will be produced, given time. Substantial progress has been made. Many of the most widely used leaflets are now available in a bilingual form, and some of the most widely used claim forms are available in Welsh.

We are committed under the Department's bilingual policy to produce further bilingual leaflets and forms. Indeed, we are striving to ensure that all future leaflets and forms will be produced in this way.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Britannia Royal Naval College

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he intends to make to release the land known as Norton playing fields used by the Britannia Royal Naval college, Dartmouth, for sale.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have reviewed our need for the land and have concluded that it should be possible to release most of it. No date for disposal can yet be given, but, work is in hand with the object of bringing a sale forward as soon as possible.

Support Command

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Tornados, (b) Jaguars, (c) Phantoms, (d) Harriers and (e) Buccaneers are assigned to Support Command.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Support Command's main functions are to provide maintenance, training and support services to the RAF. The command has no operational flying commitment and does not therefore have assigned to it aircraft of the types specified.

Artillery Regiments

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reduction in the number of artillery pieces will result from the planned reduction in the number of artillery regiments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The reduction in the number of artillery pieces deployed in the field Army as a result of the planned reduction in the number of artillery regiments is expected to be 68.

Falklands and Belize

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to annex C of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1992", how many Phantoms are in the flight assigned to the Falklands; when they are due to be replaced by Tornado F3s; and how many Harriers are in the flight assigned to Belize.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Phantoms assigned to the Falklands were replaced by Tornados at the end of July. For operational reasons, we do not release details of the number of aircraft in these theatres.

Tanks

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reductions in tank numbers will result from the planned reduction in armoured regiments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The reduction in the number of tanks deployed in the field Army as a result of the planned reduction in the number of armoured regiments is expected to be 299.

Armoured Combat Vehicles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reductions in armoured combat vehicles and armoured combat vehicle lookalikes are envisaged as a result of the planned reduction in the size of the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The exact quantities of armoured combat vehicles and armoured vehicle lookalikes to be deployed when the planned reductions in the Army have been completed are still under review.

Accommodation

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many families of British forces personnel have been evicted from his Department's accommodation in each of the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of families of personnel currently or formerly serving in the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force who have been evicted from Ministry of Defence accommodation over the last five years are set out in the table, by calendar year. The Army has been keeping figures centrally only since April 1992 and these are provided in the table. It would require disproportionate effort and cost to collect the earlier figures.

Year	Royal Navy	Army	RAF
1989	[1]8	—	12
1990	14	—	1
1991	13	—	5
1992	[2]13	[3]7	[3]2

[1] Includes one physical eviction.

[2] To 13 November 1992.

[3] Period 1 April to 30 September 1992.

Note:

No evictions overseas by Royal Navy and RAF. Number of evictions overseas by Army are unavailable.

Battalion Complements

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect "Options for Change" has had on the normal complement of a battalion in the Army; and what is that complement now.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following the implementation of "Options for Change" there will be a small increase in the typical establishment of a battalion in the Army; that establishment depends upon the type and role of the battalion and currently ranges between 628 and 927.

Iraq

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the inquiry by Lord Justice Scott into Ministers' handling of arms sales to Iraq will have access to papers and officials dealing with equipment sales to Chile during the relevant period;

(2) if he will release to the inquiry being conducted by Lord Justice Scott on sales to Iraq the studies undertaken under the auspices of his Department into the Iraqi military procurement network in the United Kingdom and the activities of Matrix Churchill.

Mr. Aitken: Lord Justice Scott will have access to all relevant Government papers.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ammunition supplied by British companies was revealed by the analysis of ammunition captured following the end of the Gulf war; and how much of this ammunition was originally shipped to Jordan.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has not carried out an extensive analysis of the origins of all ammunition captured during the Gulf conflict. However, the analysis that has been carried out has produced no evidence to suggest that Iraqi forces used any ammunition of British manufacture.

British Aerospace

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what oversight Her Majesty's Government exercised during the period 1985 to 1988 of British Aerospace's role in Arab-British dynamics; and what representations were made to the company about this role.

Mr. Aitken: My Department and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office had a number of discussions with British Aerospace on the subject of Arab-British Dynamics over the period in question.

Activity Bulletins

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to place regular bulletins on developments and activities in (a) Bosnia and (b) the Gulf, which affect the troops deployed there, in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind [pursuant to his reply, 27 October 1992, c. 616]: I intend to place a note summarising the activities of British forces in former Yugoslavia and the Gulf at intervals in the Library of each House. Such notes will be placed once a week, on a Thursday, and more often if circumstances require it. The arrangement will begin on 19 November.

Access to Neighbouring Land Act 1992

Mr. Janner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will now set an early date to bring into force the Access to Neighbouring Land Act 1992.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor hopes to be in a position to bring the Act into force by 1 February 1993.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of the Land Registry and the Public Record Office.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have done so today.

Primary Legislation

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what proportion of primary legislation is readily available (a) to hon. Members and (b) to the general public in its current amended form.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct has today published its first annual report, and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electoral Registration Officers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received from electoral registration officers about physical attacks on staff during the recent registration process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received no reports from electoral registration officers about physical attacks on staff during the year's electoral registration canvass.

Gambling

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the most recent annual figures for gross consumer expenditure on gambling, on on-course and off-course betting, gaming machines, casinos, bingo, football pools and small lotteries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimated figures for gross consumer expenditure on gambling—amount staked—in the financial year 1991-92 are tabulated. Those for off-course betting, pool betting and bingo are based on returns to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. Those for casinos and lotteries are based on returns to the Gaming Board for Great Britain, although the latter includes only those lotteries registered with the board.

The estimates for on-course betting and gaming machines cannot be calculated directly and should be treated with extreme caution.

	£ million
Off-course betting	6,026
On-course betting	764
Gaming machines	3,092
Casinos	14,680
Bingo	913
Lotteries	56

These figures should be read with those for net consumer spend—amount staked less winnings—given in reply to an earlier question from the hon. Member on 9 November, Official Report, columns 632-33, which provide a more reliable indicator of gambling expenditure.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the disturbances that have taken place at the Wolds private prison since it opened in April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For disturbances up to and including 27 June 1992, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 6 July 1992, at column 38. Since that time, there have been two disturbances at Wolds remand prison.

On 13 July at about 2200 hours some 50 prisoners on B wing refused to return to their cells. Within a short time, all but 11 prisoners had returned to their cells. It was decided at 0310 hours on 14 July to enter the unit with control and restraint teams. By this time, two further prisoners had locked themselves away. By 0325 hours the remaining nine had been removed to the segregation unit without injury to staff or prisoners. No damage was caused to property and buildings. The Home Office controller was present throughout the incident. The removals to the segregation unit were observed by a member of the board of visitors and the prison doctor was present.

On 17 October, 31 prisoners on F unit refused to go to their cells at 10 pm. They barricaded themselves into a television room to watch a boxing match involving Frank Bruno. At the end of the fight 20 minutes later the prisoners returned to their cells. No force was used as the incident was of short duration and peaceful at all times.

Private Detectives

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidelines exist for the engagement of private detective agencies by the Government for the purpose of investigating the activities of British citizens;

(2) on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The engagement of private detectives is a matter for individual Departments and no central guidance has been issued. My Department has made no such engagements.

Voting

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many different types of electoral registration form are currently available in England and Wales; and what proposals he has to standardise them.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Electoral registration officers may choose whether to conduct a postal or personal canvass and so different versions of the electoral registration form, form A, are available. An English and Welsh bilingual version is also available. Some electoral registration officers produce their own forms, adapted to suit local requirements. However, the content of all these forms is broadly the same. Information on the number of locally produced registration forms is not held centrally. Separate forms are used for the registration of service electors, overseas electors and voluntary mental patients. A working group will be looking at electoral registration forms as part of the post-election review.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to increase the time scale for returning completed postal or proxy voting forms for elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 29 October, at column 768.

Debt Collectors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce proposals to amend the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 to require the disclosure of previous convictions by persons seeking work in the debt-collecting industry.

Mr. Jack: We have no present plans to amend the Act. But, as I explained on 10 November in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) at column 697, we intend to re-examine the number and range of exceptions to the Act as part of the review of the arrangements for the disclosure of information from criminal records which will be undertaken in advance of the computerisation of the national collection of criminal records.

Riot Duty

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police authorities have substantially reduced the number of officers trained for riot duty; why such action was taken in each case; and if he will make it his policy that no officer will be required to undertake riot duties untrained and inadequately equipped.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Training within individual police forces is a matter for the chief officer concerned. I understand that all officers engaged in policing public disorder are now trained to common minimum standards.

Market Testing

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff have so far been seconded to work in the market-testing unit in his Department; and how many more secondments are planned.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are presently 27 members of staff in the Home Office market-testing unit and three in the prison service market-testing section. It is planned to increase staff numbers to 54·5 in the market-testing unit and seven in the prison service.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of his Department's operations will be subjected to market testing during financial years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Market testing within the Home Office will be taking place in the following areas with a view to a decision by September 1993:

Accommodation and office services
Computer services
Internal audit
Pay services
Police National Computer (Hendon datacentre)

Prison service:

College, training and facilities management
Computing services
Court escorts
Dog service
Education
Prison establishments
Warehousing, distribution and fleet management

The future programme is under consideration.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the budget for the market-testing unit in his Department for the financial years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The budget for the Home Office market-testing unit is £1,143,000 in 1992-93 and £1,260,000 in 1993-94. That for the prison service market testing section is £70,000 in 1992-93 and £190,000 in 1993-94.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the female remand and sentenced population in England and Wales for the latest date available; and what is his best estimate of the number of these prisoners who have dependent children.

Mr. Jack: On 30 September 1992, the latest date for which information is readily available, 383 untried or convicted unsentenced and 1,244 sentenced females were held in prison service establishments or police cells in England and Wales. Our best estimate is that 47 per cent. of the females interviewed[1] said they had children or step-children under the age of 18 living with them at the time they came into prison.

Remand Prisoners (Psychiatric Reports)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners in England and Wales were referred for psychiatric reports in 1991 and for the first six months of 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available centrally is based on annual returns by prison medical officers and relates to financial years. In the year ended 31 March 1992, 4,732 psychiatric reports were prepared at the request of courts on persons remanded in custody.

Muslim Organisations

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what meetings he has had with representatives of Muslim organisations in the United Kingdom; if he will list the organisations which have been invited to attend such meetings; what matters were discussed; if it is his intention that meetings attended by Ministers or officials will be convened on a regular basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has had no such meetings, but he met a number of representatives from Muslim organisations when they attended a reception given by him for members of the ethnic minority communities at the Home Office on 21 October. Among those invited were representatives from the United Kingdom action committee on Islamic affairs, the Union of Muslim Organisations, the Bradford Council of Mosques, Regents Park Mosque, Brixton Mosque and the Islamic Forum of Europe. I have visited the Golden Hillock Language Job Club, run by Dar-Ul-Uloom Islamia in Small Heath, Birmingham on 17 September. I have also met representatives from the Union of Muslim organisations on 29 October to discuss a range of issues and will be attending their dinner party on 19 November to celebrate the Prophet's birthday. Such meetings reflect the high frequency of contacts at ministerial and official level.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from (a) organisations representing Muslims in the United Kingdom and (b) others about difficulties concerning the investigation of deaths by coroners where a doctor's certificate cannot be given at weekends or otherwise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No recent representations have been received from Muslim organisations or individuals about difficulties over the investigation of deaths by coroners. From time to time we receive correspondence from or on behalf of Muslims about coroners post-mortem examinations; the most recent letter was received in March.

Miscarriages of Justice

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received this year on miscarriages of justice; and what plans he has to speed up his Department's investigations into such cases.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The Home Office regularly receives a large number of letters which raise the general subject of miscarriages of justice; but no count is kept of this correspondence. Departmental workload statistics show that between 1 January and 30 September 1992, 589 pieces of correspondence were received alleging wrongful conviction in particular cases. This figure may include some further representations by the same correspondent about the same case. This figure does not include representations received about individual cases which have become the subject of concerted campaigns. All representations are considered carefully and as quickly as their complexity and available resources will allow. The number of staff allocated to this work has been increased this year from 16 to 20—an increase of 25 per cent. Staffing is kept under regular review.

Crimes Against Women

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were victims of (a) sexual assault, (b) domestic violence and (c) murder from 1979 to the latest date where figures are available; and what proportion were ethnic minority women.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 9 November 1992]: The regular annual statistics of notifiable offences recorded by the police are not routinely broken down by gender or ethnic grouping of victims, or by relationship of victim to offender. The annual publications "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" contain figures for 1979 to 1990 for rape, indecent assault on a female, and unlawful intercourse with a female—chapter 2—and for homicide with a female victim—chapter 4. Corresponding figures for sexual offences in 1991 are published in Home Office "Statistical Bulletin" 14/92. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Tax

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidance to local authorities for the collection of the council tax for households where the liable person or persons are in receipt of income support, but where other members of that household are wage earners.

Mr. Robin Squire: In the case described by the hon. Member, council tax benefit will meet the full council tax liability except for a deduction in respect of any of the wage earners who are classed as non-dependents. This has been made clear to local authorities in guidance issued to them by my Department and the Department of Social Security. I have sent a copy to the hon. Member.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce the transitional relief arrangements for the council tax; and if he will make a statement.

[1] National prison survey. Information collected in January and February 1991.

Mr. Robin Squire: We will be announcing the details of the council tax transitional reduction scheme as part of the local government finance settlement proposals later this month.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for the recovery of (a) community charge arrears and (b) council tax arrears following the introduction of the council tax from people who are (1) unemployed, (2) in receipt of sickness benefit or (3) in receipt of income support.

Mr. Robin Squire: The existing range of enforcement methods, including deductions from income support and distress, will be available to enable authorities to recover community charge and council tax owed to them. It is open to authorities to come to voluntary arrangements with debtors to pay off their arrears.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the relief available in each band under the council tax regulations for disabled persons.

Mr. Robin Squire: The intention of the scheme of council tax reductions for people with disabilities is that no-one should be required to pay more council tax as a result of extra accommodation required because of a disability. Accordingly, where a dwelling in bands B to H includes a qualifying feature the council tax bill will be reduced to that for the valuation band immediately below that to which the dwelling was allocated in the valuation list. If a dwelling is in band A, any additional accommodation cannot have resulted in a higher council tax banding, and so no reduction is appropriate.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has issued to local authorities in respect of the disregard of certain persons for the purposes of council tax liability assessment.

Mr. Robin Squire: Extensive guidance on this matter was included in council tax practice note No. 2, "Liability, Discounts and Exemptions", which has been sent to all local authorities. I have sent a copy of the practice note to the hon. Member.

Community Charge Arrears

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has issued to local authorities following the decision in R v. Wolverhampton Justices ex parte Mould concerning the deduction from income support for the payment of community charge arrears; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is clearly sensible that authorities should consider all methods of recovery, including deductions from income support, before applying for a committal warrant. Community charge practice note 15 on enforcement of the community charge, (which was sent to all charging authorities, advises authorities to consider other available recovery options before seeking a warrant of commitment.

Self-government Charter

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to sign the European charter of local self-government.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government do not intend to sign the charter. The Government support the broad principles underlying the charter, but do not consider local government to be a suitable subject for regulation by an international convention.

Rents

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the requirement imposed on housing associations to maximise rents, as awarded by rent officers and rent assessment committees, in order to enable them to receive a Government grant.

Mr. Baldry: There are a number of grant-related regimes that are affected by the level of housing associations' rents and I am afraid that it is not clear which of these the hon. Member has in mind. If she would care to write to me with further particulars, I shall gladly look into the matter.

Water Disconnections

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of disconnections of domestic water supply during the current year broken down into (a) standard region, (b) utility region and (c) local authority district.

Mr. Maclean: The Director General of Water Services published on 16 November, data on disconnections for the six-month period from 1 April to 30 September 1992. The table shows domestic disconnections broken down by reference to OFWAT customer service committee regions, which correspond to the areas of the water and sewerage undertakers, and by water company area. Data on disconnections by local authority district are not available.

Housing

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals for a housing programme that is affordable for low-income tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities already own and manage more than 3·8 million dwellings. The Government's focus for the provision of new affordable housing is housing associations. The Government plan to allocate around £6 billion to the Housing Corporation over the three years from 1992-93. We have recently announced that an extra £600 million will be spent this year to enable housing associations to purchase new, empty and repossessed properties for rent and to allow housing association tenants to buy homes in the private sector. Over the three years from 1992-93 housing associations will be able to provide considerably more than the 153,000 new social homes forecast in the Government's election manifesto.

We have increased funds for the Housing Corporation from £936 million in 1989-90 to £2·3 billion this year. In total, £7·5 billion is being made available by the Government to support the corporation's capital expenditure over the four years from 1992-93. The Government hope to be able to increase the private finance levered in by these public funds in order to attract a further £3 billion from the private sector over the period to support the provision of new social housing.

Ministers have also encouraged local authorities to work with others to assist the provision of social housing in their areas, for example through the use of their planning powers and other enabling functions.

Opencast Mining

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hectares of land were approved for opencast coal mining through planning decisions in 1991-92, both in volume terms and as a percentage of the land applied for; and what was the percentage for land approved in relation to land applied for each year since 1983-84.

Mr. Baldry: According to statistics published by the County Planning Officers' Society, the volume of land approved for opencast coal mining through planning decisions in 1991-92 was 2,333 hectares which was 71·26 per cent. of the land applied for. The percentage figures for each year since 1983-84 are as follows:

1983-84	75·40
1984-85	42·10
1985-86	48·98
1986-87	69·14
1987-88	42·06
1988-89	57·87
1989-90	63·33
1990-91	47·64

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who in his Department has been appointed to oversee and develop green issues; how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in his Department.

Mr. Howard: I take the lead in overseeing and developing green issues in my Department and my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Environment and Countryside has day-to-day responsibility. Staff and expenditure programmes throughout the Department are concerned with environmental issues. In the specific areas of environmental protection, countryside and water, staff posts will have increased by 12 during the current financial year—figures for next year have yet to be determined—and public expenditure provision for 1993-94 is £21 million higher than that for 1992-93.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish a regional Ordnance Survey office in Wales.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Office of Water Regulation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the Office of Water Regulation in 1991-92; and how many staff were employed.

Mr. Maclean: Details of the running costs and staffing of the Office of Water Services during 1991-92 are contained in the director general's "Annual Report 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. The report records that running costs for 1991-92 were £5·44 million and that at 31 March 1992 the Office of Water Services employed 132 staff.

Inner Cities Religious Council

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Inner Cities Religious Council was established; what is the relationship between the council and his Department; what organisations have been invited to be represented on the council, to date; how many meetings of the council have been convened; which Ministers and or officials are represented on the council; what matters have been discussed at meetings with the council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field), on 1 July, Official Report, column 560. The Government have set up the Inner Cities Religious Council as part of its "Action for Cities" initiative; I chair the council, and Rev. Chris Beales has been seconded to my Department from the Church of England, to act as its secretary.

The council first met on July 20, and will do so again on December 8. The main items discussed at the first meeting were:

the Government's Action for Cities programmes;
the future work of the Inner Cities Religious Council;
the Council's Terms of Reference;
Proposals for a regional Multi-Faith Conference on Inner Cities. (This was held on 27 October 1992, at Kirklees).

The director of the Inter-Faith Network attends meetings as an observer, and officials from my Department and the Home Office are also in attendance. Ministers or officials from other "Action for Cities" departments will attend as necessary.

Membership of the council is currently as follows:

Dr. Mughram Al-Ghamdi	Director, Islamic Cultural Centre, Regent's Park Mosque. (MUSLIM)
Rt. Reverend Tom Butler	Bishop of Leicester. Chair of the 'Faith in the City' Advisory Group (1986-90). (CHURCH OF ENGLAND)
His Hon. Israel Finestein QC	President, Board of Deputies of British Jews. (JEWISH)
Ms. Anne Forbes	Project Leader, "Faith in Elderly People", Leeds; Member of Roman Catholic Bishops' Conference Committee for Community Affairs. (ROMAN CATHOLIC)
Reverend Alan Greenbat	Consultant, Office of the Chief Rabbi. (JEWISH)
Mr. Surjit Singh Kalra	Former teacher and co-ordinator, South Asian languages. (SIKH)
Mr. Deepak Naik	Public Relations Officer for the National Council of Hindu Temples UK. (HINDU)
Reverend Bryan Rippin	Chairman, Sheffield District of the Methodist Church. (FREE CHURCH FEDERAL COUNCIL)
Mr. Iqbal Sacranie	Joint Convenor of UK Action Committee on Islamic Affairs. Member of the Home Secretary's Advisory Council on Race Relations. (MUSLIM)
Mr. Om Parkash Sharma	President, National Council of Hindu Temples. (HINDU)
Mr. Indarjit Singh, JP	Chairman, Sikh Council for Inter-Faith Relations. Member of Home Secretary's Advisory Committee on Race Relations. (SIKH)
Rt. Reverend Ossie Williams	Director of Ministerial Leadership Development, Church of God of Prophecy. Until October 1992, National Overseer. (BLACK-LED CHURCHES)

Bathing Water

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the results of this year's bathing water quality monitoring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Results of the monitoring during the 1992 bathing session show that 79 per cent. of the 455 identified bathing waters in the United Kingdom met the mandatory coliform bacteria standards of the EC bathing water directive. This compares with 76 per cent. in 1991, and 77 per cent. in 1990.

Most waters now consistently meet the required standards and it is encouraging to note that of 18,000 samples taken this season 96 per cent. were satisfactory. Schemes in the £2 billion clean-up programme coming into operation in the next few years are designed to bring the minority of non-compliant bathing waters up to standard.

The main results for the United Kingdom are summarised in the table. A report with detailed results will be placed in the Library in due course.

Voluntary Transfers

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the consultation paper setting out his proposals for possible changes to the arrangements for large-scale voluntary transfers.

Sir George Young: I am issuing the consultation today and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the House Library. The paper contains, among other things, proposals to limit the number of properties transferred in a single batch and for redressing the financial imbalance between central and local government which has arisen in the past as a result of the housing benefit costs to the Exchequer of transfers. These proposals will facilitate a continuing programme of transfers consistent with our manifesto commitment.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will also be issuing a consultation paper shortly.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest have been damaged or destroyed in each of the last three years and to date in the current year.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 November 1992]: The latest available information on damage to SSSIs is contained in the 17th and final report of the former Nature Conservancy Council, a copy of which is in the Library. Information in respect of the year ending 31 March 1992 is currently being gathered by English Nature and will be published in its first anniversary report to be presented to Parliament later in the year.

Homelessness

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further proposals he has to deal with the problem of street homelessness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 13 November 1992]: Under the Government's rough sleepers initiative, we have made £96 million available over three years to provide 850 new places in hostels for people sleeping rough in central London, and to provide a total of 2,900 places in more permanent accommodation for people in hostels to move on to.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 12 November that further resources of £86 million would be made available over the next three years to build on the success of the rough sleepers initiative in assisting people who sleep rough in central London. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning will announce details shortly.

Nationally, my Department makes grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 to support the national homelessness advice service and some 150 projects run by voluntary organisations throughout the country that provide direct, practical help to homeless people. Resources in 1993-94 will be increased to £6·5 million from £6·1 million this year.

Urban Priority Areas

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of sustaining in real terms the value of funding for urban priority areas in England.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Urban priority areas benefit from a range of programmes within my Department's urban group including city challenge, and also derelict land grant and city grant which will transfer to the Urban Regeneration Agency. My right hon. and learned Friend announced last week an increase of £93 million in the resources planned for the urban group in 1993-94. Urban priority areas will also benefit from their new freedom to spend capital receipts, augmented by the new urban partnership fund which we have established as part of capital partnership.

Old Foleshill Gas Works, Coventry

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce a decision on the application for derelict land grant for the development of the Old Foleshill gas works site in the Coventry, North-East constituency.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 17 November 1992]: No application has been made for derelict land grant or for city grant for this project. The developers have presented what they have called a preliminary application for city grant, but are still working up their ideas. I understand that they may soon be in a position to put firm proposals to the Department.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the mid-1991 population figures from the 1991 census will be used in setting the standard spending assessments for 1993-94 for local authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 17 November 1992]: My right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment will be announcing his detailed proposals for standard spending assessments for 1993-94 shortly.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total revenue expenditure, excluding revenue support grant to local authorities, by his Department in each of the English regions for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows a breakdown of the main areas of spending which are allocated on a regional basis.

Local Government Staff

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his proposals for limiting pay rises for local government staff.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local government is responsible for determining the pay of its own APT and C—white collar —chief executive and chief officer, manual and crafts staff. Ministers have no power to limit pay settlements for these groups. I expect local government to conclude settlements within the 0 to 1·5 per cent. range announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement and the chairmen of the local authority associations have undertaken to do their very best to produce settlements within this range.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what impact has been made on the environment figures in the tables annexed to the "Autumn Statement" from the transfer of energy efficiency responsibility from the former Department of Energy to his own Department.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The baseline provision for the programmes operated by the Energy Efficiency Office—EEO—was transferred to the Department of the Environment following the general election in April 1992. The revised provision for the EEO for the three years covered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement is as follows, to the nearest £ million:

1993-94	69
1994-95	71
1995-96	71

The expenditure is included within the Department's "other environmental services" block.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the various schemes under which his Department supports the introduction of energy conservation measures in domestic homes, whether owned or tenanted: and if he will indicate the amounts spent by his Department or the former Department of Energy in each of the last three years in each category, and the amounts projected to be spent in the current year and in the next two financial years.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Estimates based on information reported by local authorities on the HIP2 form submitted with their 1990 and 1991 housing investment programme bids show capital spending on improved insulation and other energy conservation measures of:

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Local authorities own housing stock	280	230	210
Non local authority dwellings	10	30	30

The figures for local authorities' own housing stock include expenditure under estate action and the general maintenance and improvement programme for local authority housing stock and, in the case of 1991-92, the green house programme in its first year of operation. Expenditure under the latter was £10·4 million in that year. Those for non local authority dwellings cover house renovation grants and minor works assistance. Estimates of expenditure for estate action and the general maintenance and improvement programmes for the current year will not be available until the HIP2 forms for 1992 have been processed. No forecasts for the energy efficiency elements of those programmes are available for future years. In addition to those programmes, separate provision is available for the green house programme of £45 million this year, and £5 million in 1993-94.

There is also expenditure on energy efficiency by the Housing Corporation under its programmes for the refurbishment of housing associations' stock, but this is not separately identified.

The home energy efficiency scheme—HEES—came into operation on 1 January 1991. In the three months to the end of the financial year, some £1·3 million was paid out in grants under the scheme. In 1991-92 the figure was some £23 million. The amount available for grant in the current financial year is some £35 million and it is likely that a similar amount will be available next year. No forecast is available for future years.

Prior to the introduction of HEES, expenditure on grants for draughtproofing materials under the energy grant scheme operated under the employment training programme, was £10·8 million in 1989-90 and £9·31 million in 1990-91.

My Department also supports the introduction of energy efficiency measures in domestic properties through information programmes such as "Helping the Earth Begins at Home".

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who in his Department has been appointed to oversee and develop green issues; how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in his Department.

Mr. Goodlad: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State oversees FCO involvement in developing international environmental policies and instigating policies for energy saving on the FCO estates. The FCO does not have major spending programmes, but some £160,000 has been allocated to 26 environmental projects throughout the world in financial year 1992-93. Within the FCO, green issues are primarily the responsibility of the Environment, science and energy department, where 10 officials work on these issues—one DS Grade 4, one DS5s, one DS5, one DS6, two DS7s, two DS9s, and two DS10s.

During the run up to the Earth summit in Rio in June, 5 additional staff were attached to the Department. At overseas posts, staff resources from economic and science sections are deployed on green issues, responding flexibly to changing needs, so it is not possible to identify the precise resource cost.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave him on 11 November, at column 213, relating to the similar question he asked about the Overseas Development Administration.

Pakistan

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Pakistan Government in respect of the death sentence passed on Mr. Gul Pervaiz Masih.

Mr. Goodlad: We have been carefully monitoring the case of Mr. Gul Masih in consultation with EC partners and other like-minded countries. We are taking suitable opportunities to express our concern to the Pakistani authorities. We understand that the case has now gone to appeal.

Third World

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the Government have for halting missile proliferation in the third world.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom was a founder member, in 1987, of the missile technology control regime and has taken a leading role in promoting a wider membership and in the recent decision to extend controls to missiles capable of delivering chemical and biological, as well as nuclear, weapons. We also regularly raise our proliferation concerns with those countries which either seek to procure missile systems or are major suppliers, to urge them not to go ahead with such transactions.

Kurdish People

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Turkish involvement in the Kurdish areas of northern Iraq; and if he will make representations to the Turkish Government to withdraw.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We ackowledge the difficult situation faced by the Turkish Government in dealing with terrorism by the PKK. The Turkish Government have given assurances that their operations in northern Iraq were temporary and are aimed solely at destroying PKK capability to mount attacks against Turkey from northern Iraq, and that they do not intend to hold on to Iraqi territory. We look to Turkey to complete its withdrawal as soon as possible.

Private Detectives

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Iraq

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Iraq has been complying with United Nations resolution 688; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The imposition of "no-fly zones" and patrols by coalition aircraft have helped to deter attacks by Iraqi forces on Iraqi civilians in both northern and southern Iraq. But the Iraqi regime continues to maintain an economic blockade of northern Iraq and we remain concerned about reports of military action by Iraqi ground forces in the marshes of southern Iraq.

Iraq refuses to implement Security Council resolutions 706 and 712 which provide for limited exports of Iraqi oil to pay for humanitarian operations. On 22 October Iraq and the United Nations signed a memorandum of understanding which provides for a programme of humanitarian relief and the deployment of United Nations guards in Iraq until 31 March 1993. We look to the Iraqi Government to allow the United Nations and relief agencies to operate throughout Iraq.

PRIME MINISTER

"Britain in Europe"

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister what are his reasons for omitting from the booklet "Britain in Europe" a reference to the provisions contained in article K.3 of the treaty on European union on qualified majority voting on certain decisions relating to foreign policy on security.

The Prime Minister: Article J.3 provides for the use of qualified majority voting for certain implementing decisions in areas of the common foreign and security policy subject to joint action. Majority voting would, however, apply only where member states have explicitly and unanimously so decided. It is not possible to cover all the provisions of the treaty in a 24-page booklet.

British-German Meeting

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister what were the costs to the Exchequer of the bilateral British-German meeting at Ditchley park on Wednesday 11 November.

The Prime Minister: The estimated cost to the Exchequer is £57,000.

Iraq

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government were informed that Iraq's military capabilities were potentially directed against a country or countries other than Iran.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Prior to the invasion of Kuwait, the assessment made by the United Kingdom, and other countries, including Iraq's neighbours was that Iraq would use her military strength to bolster her position as a dominant power in the region, but that she would not risk world hostility by aggressive action. That assessment changed when Iraq started to make threats against Kuwait, but it was still thought that Iraq would use the threats to extract concessions from Kuwait, not launch an invasion.

Special Advisers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the current list of special advisers attached to Ministers stating the Minister they work for and their previous occupations.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 November 1992]: There are currently 37 special advisers attached to Ministers. The names of the advisers, the Ministers they work for and their previous occupations before the last general election are as follows:

Name	Minister(s) served	Previous Occupation
K. Adams	Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	Special Adviser
E. Bickham	Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs	Special Adviser

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will arrange for the papers supplied to defence counsel in the Matrix Churchill case to be placed in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 November 1992]: No. The papers were supplied to the defence for the purposes of the trial. Lord Justice Scott will have access to them.

EDUCATION

Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what person or body he proposes to appoint to examine inspectors' reports on a school to determine whether any weaknesses in aspects of teaching are such as to cause him to require the governing body of that school to draw up an action plan under the proposals in the Education Bill.

Mr. Forth: The Education (Schools) Act 1992 requires all schools to draw up action plans following inspections under section 9 of that Act.

The proposals in the Education Bill relate to the particular circumstnaces where an inspection identifies a school as failing to give its pupils an acceptable standard of education.

Trainee Teachers

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what decisions have been taken regarding the time primary school trainee teachers should spend in the classroom.

Mr. Forth: We are determined that the training of primary school teachers should be more school-based and more closely related to the needs of schools and to the requirements of the national curriculum. We wish however to take into account the advice we shall be receiving from the National Curriculum Council and the Office for Standards in Education about primary education more generally. We have therefore set September 1994 as the date for the introduction of new criteria for primary phase initial teacher training.

Private Detectives

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Forman: The Department has not engaged any private detective agencies.

Examination Results

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library copies of the comparative tables of GCSE and A/AS level performance in 1992.

Mr. Patten: I have today placed copies of all 108 tables in the Library. Copies of their local tables are being sent to all parents now choosing secondary schools for their children, and all tables are also freely available on request. As promised in the parents charter, we are opening up information about schools to the widest possible audience, and helping parents to make fully informed choices about their children's education.

WALES

Adult Illiteracy

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to combat adult illiteracy in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: During the last four financial years, the Department has approved expenditure by local education authorities of £668,800 under the grants for education support and training arrangements for the provision of open learning centres for adults with literacy and numeracy problems. In the same period, the Department has contributed approximately £733,000 to the adult literacy and basic skills unit for its basic skills work with adults.

Training and enterprise councils are able to help those adults whose literacy needs seriously impair their ability to compete in the labour market. For example, normal entry conditions to employment training are waived. Training programmes can be individually designed to give adults with literacy needs the support and help they require to progress towards general and vocational competencies.

From 1 April 1993, the Further Education Funding Council for Wales will become responsible for courses of basic literacy in English, literacy in Welsh and communication skills for people with learning difficulties so as to prepare them for further education.

European Youth Initiative

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide a funding contribution towards the European youth initiative.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The possibility of funding a youth conference in Wales as part of the Marco Polo Cathay challenge initiative has been discussed with the promoter who has been asked to provide further information.

Photovoltaic Solar Energy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will develop a demonstration project involving the development of photovoltaic solar energy in up to 1,000 houses in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The question of pilot projects would be for consideration in the light of the current programme of assessment studies which the Department of Trade and Industry has commissioned.

Green Issues

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how the Departmental Green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government's policy on, and associated measures for the protection of the ozone layer are set out in the environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance", Cm 1200. Details of progress to date and of further action planned are given in the first and second progress reports, Cm. 1655 and 2068. Copies of all three publications are held in the Library of the House.

As the Green Minister for the Welsh Office, I have played an active part in the formulation of this policy. Within the Welsh Office, as part of the Department's purchasing policy, environmental concerns are factors taken into account in all purchasing decisions. In addition a "green housekeeping" strategy for the Department is being prepared which will cover the use of ozone-depleting substances as well as other relevant environmental issues.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many projects were selected to qualify for the portion of the non-fossil fuel obligation granted to renewables in Wales in 1990 and 1991; how many such projects were (a) new, (b) involved with landfill gas generation and (c) wind projects; and how many of each of those categories of project (i) still await planning permission, (ii) have been withdrawn and (iii) are on line.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Twenty-two projects in Wales qualified under the non-fossil fuel obligation granted to renewable energy schemes in 1990 and 1991.

Of these 22 projects:
(a) 16 are new projects
(b) There are no landfill gas projects
(c) 14 are wind projects
Of these categories:
(a) New Projects
    (i) Four are awaiting planning permission
    (ii) One project has been withdrawn
    (iii) Three are on line
(b) Not applicable
(c) Wind Projects[1]
    (i) Four are awaiting planning permission
    (ii) One has been withdrawn
    (iii) Two are on line

[1] In addition seven wind farms have planning permission; six of these are under construction.

Opencast Mines

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the opencast sites within the south Wales coalfield area that are currently monitored for coal dust levels in the atmosphere.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held by the Department. The main responsibility for monitoring air pollution around opencast sites rests with the environmental health departments of local authorities

Family Planning Services

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those health authorities which provided domiciliary family planning services in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: District health authorities that reported making at least one family planning domiciliary visit in each of the years requested is listed as follows. It is possible that authorities not listed make provision for a service, but it is not taken up.

1985	Gwent and Mid Glamorgan
1986	Gwent, Mid Glamorgan and West Glamorgan
1987	Gwent and West Glamorgan
1988	Gwent
1989-90	Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan
1990-91	Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan
1991-92	Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan

Wind Energy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to develop an offshore wind power generation demonstration project.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Family Health Services Authorities

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to change the functions of family health services authorities in Wales to make them into bodies with no providing role, but exclusively into purchasers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are no such plans.

Child Psychotherapists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds his Department makes available to enable child psychotherapists to undertake the required four-year postgraduate training.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. Postgraduate training for child psychotherapists and other staff groups is a matter for employers.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will delay the requirement on local authorities to draw up contaminated land registers until his Department has issued guidance to those local authorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is no requirement on local authorities to draw up such registers until Parliament approves regulations under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act, 1990. Some guidance has already been made available to local authorities via consultation papers issued by the Government on this subject and a final version will be provided when regulations come to be made.

A465

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if construction of the A465 between Aberdulais and Glynneath will now proceed, following capital allocations in the autumn statement; and if he will announce a start date.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Nearly £3 million is being spent on this scheme in 1992-93. My right hon. Friend will shortly decide the allocation of resources to individual programmes for future years under the normal block arrangements.

Royal Armament Depot, Trecwn

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will respond to the fifth report of the Welsh Affairs Committee, Session 1991-92, House of Commons paper No. 316, on the social and economic consequences of the closure of the royal armament depot, Trecwn.

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to announce that the response has been published today as Command Paper 2093.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Mates: Yes. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Teachers Pay

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assurances have been given by the Department of Education to the education and library boards that the funding of the 1992 teachers pay award would be fully met by DENI.

Mr. Hanley: When initial financial allocations for 1992-93 were made by DENI to education and library boards, they were informed that their budgets assumed an increase of 5 per cent. in teachers costs from 1 April 1992. Boards were also advised that should the pay settlement be greater than 5 per cent. the Department would seek to ensure that the increase would be covered by additional resources, but no guarantee could be given at that stage.

Curriculum Council

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the staff costs for running the Northern Ireland Curriculum Council; and how much the council spends on research.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the remuneration of the chair of the Northern Ireland Curriculum Council.

Mr. Hanley: The accounts of the Northern Ireland Curriculum Council for the 1990-91 and 1991-92 financial years show the following figures:

	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
Staff Costs	730,130	962,574
Research and Development Projects	46,809	160,198

The 1991-92 figures are unaudited.

The chairman of the Northern Ireland Curriculum Council is paid an honorarium which is currently £6,448 per annum.

Further Education

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of setting up the computer information system for the management of further education in Northern Ireland; and how much the Government are spending maintaining this system.

Mr. Hanley: The total cost of the project, which was completed on 30 September 1992, was £3,704,000. The Department of Education is making available £125,000 during the period 1 October 1992 to 31 March 1993 for ongoing support for the project, including hardware and software maintenance costs. From 1 April 1993, support costs amounting to some £250,000 per annum will be met by the education and library boards.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Employment Contracts

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many right hon. and hon. Members have deposited contracts of employment for staff paid via the Fees Office.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 5 November 1992]: Six hundred and forty right hon. and hon. Members have authorised payment of their staff salaries direct by the Fees Office and are therefore required to lodge a statement of the main terms and conditions of employment of such staff. To date, 573 Members have lodged statements relating to 1,052 members of staff.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office has not used any private detectives.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make representations to the Government of Japan to ensure that all sea shipments of plutonium between the United Kingdom and Japan meet the requirements recommended in the applicable provisions of the international maritime dangerous goods code and the International Atomic Energy Agency transport guidelines;

(2) if he will make representations to the Government of Japan to ensure that all casks involved in the shipment of plutonium between the United Kingdom and Japan have been adequately tested as withstanding fire, collision and immersion conditions associated with maximum credible accidents; and what representations he has made to Japan on the security of the casks;

(3) if he will make representations to the Government of Japan to ensure that emergency port of call arrangements are fully agreed prior to the commencement of the shipment of plutonium between the United Kingdom and Japan.

Mr. Eggar: No such representations are necessary. The detailed arrangements are a matter for the Japanese authorities. The carriage of plutonium is only allowed subject to compliance with stringent international standards which meet in full the applicable provisions of the international maritime dangerous goods code and the International Atomic Energy Agency transport guidelines, to both of which Japan subscribes. In accordance with these reqirements, plutonium is transported in extremely robust special containers which are subject to rigorous fire, impact and immersion conditions. Appropriate measures are taken to ensure the security of these movements.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide in separate tabulated form figures for the total annual amount of (a) civil separated plutonium exported, (b) civil separated plutonium imported, (c) civil plutonium in spent fuel exported, (d) civil plutonium in spent fuel imported, (e) civil plutonium in fresh nuclear fuel pins imported and (f) civil plutonium in fresh nuclear fuel pins exported, since April 1988.

Mr. Eggar (holding answer 26 October 1992): Details of the United Kingdom's imports and exports of civil plutonium from April 1988 to March 1991 were given in the annual plutonium figures published by the former Department of Energy and placed in the Library of the House. The corresponding figures for 1991-92 are being compiled and will be published by my Department shortly.

Furniture Regulations

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those organisations and other bodies which will be subject to the regulations relating to foam and second-hand furniture.

Mr. Leigh: The Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended in 1989, apply to all persons who supply domestic upholstered furniture in the course of business within the meaning of section 46 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987. In this context supply includes the provision of goods by sale, hiring out, loan or gift.

The regulations require that from 1 March 1990 new furniture must meet all the fire resistance requirements, and that from 1 March 1993 second-hand furniture—except furniture which was made before 1950—must also meet those requirements.

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice he has given to county councils trading standards officers concerning the recycling of furniture which does not comply with the foam regulations relating to second-hand furniture.

Mr. Leigh: No advice has been given by my Department to local authority trading standards officers about the application of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988—as amended in 1989—to organisations which recycle or redistribute second-hand furniture.

Consumer Advice

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will amend the Consumer Credit Act 1974 to introduce a statutory duty for the provision of consumer advice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: No. The Consumer Credit Act 1974 regulates the way that credit is offered to consumers and requires those giving credit or hire facilities or debt advice to be licensed by the Director General of Fair Trading. There are no plans for the provision of consumer advice to be made a statutory duty.

Burn Injuries (Garments)

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many incidents of burning have been reported in respect of garments carrying the "keep away from fire" label in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Leigh: My Department's home, including leisure, accident surveillance system statistics for 1990 record 43 accidents in which persons required hospital treatment for burn injuries as a result of any garment being worn catching fire.

The records do not show whether or not the garments carried a "keep away from fire" label.

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken to strengthen the Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985.

Mr. Leigh: There are no present plans to revise the Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985.

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the causes of reported accidents resulting from the burning of nightwear worn by children in the last year.

Mr. Leigh: In 1990, the latest year for which statistics are available my Department's home accident surveillance system (HASS) data on home accidents records three accidents resulting from the burning of nightwear worn by children under 14 years. The details given are:

Item	Subject	Source of Fire
Nightshirt	Boy aged 12 years	Gas fire
Nightdress	Girl aged three years	Matches
Nightdress	Girl aged seven years	Unknown

Small Businesses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small firms have gone out of business in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Leigh: The number of businesses registered and deregistered for VAT in the past 10 years is given in the table.

Registrations and deregistrations: 1981-1991

Year	Registrations 000's	Deregistrations 000's
1981	152	120
1982	166	145
1983	180	145
1984	182	152
1985	183	163
1986	192	165
1987	210	169
1988	240	172
1989	256	176
1990	239	184
1991	206	203

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new proposals his Department has to help small businesses collect outstanding debts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 3 November 1992]: Late payment debt is an issue which we are actively addressing. Following from the 1992 Budget, the President of the Board of Trade is, with colleagues:

(a) introducing new contracting terms requiring companies awarded Government contracts to pay their subcontractors promptly, normally within 30 days;

(b) consulting on proposals to require large companies to state in their reports and accounts how quickly they pay;

(c) Promoting improvements to court procedures for debt recovery.

Furthermore, the Department of Trade and Industry is providing financial support for three trade associations to operate pilot prompt payment initiatives. Many training and enterprise councils and other bodies also provide training for businesses on credit management and debt collection.

My noble Friend Baroness Denton of Wakefield, as Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms, has given her personal commitment to help small firms experiencing late payment by large companies of public bodies and supports the initiative of the CBI and other bodies in relation to prompt payment.

Postal Services

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the EC paper on the development of a single market for postal services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I have received a wide range of written and oral representations from users of the postal services, private sector competitors, Post Office employees, the Post Office itself and other interested parties both individual and corporate. I expect to receive additional representations over the coming weeks. All these representations will be carefully analysed and taken fully into account by the Government before we prepare our formal response to the European Commission towards the end of this year.

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has received concerning the possible privatisation of the Post Office;

(2) which organisations, which sources and which individuals are being consulted in connection with the Government's review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office;

(3) with which companies he has had meetings to discuss the possible privatisation of the Post Office.

Mr. Leigh: I have received a number of representations from interested parties and the general public concerning the Post Office review.

I have held meetings, or am due to hold meetings, with the following in connection with the review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office: the Post Office, the Post Office Users National Council, Union of Communication Workers, National Communications Union, Communications Managers Association, National Union of Civil and Public Servants, Post Office Unions Council, the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters, the Association of International Courier and Express Services, TNT Express (UK), DHL International (UK) Ltd, Securicor Omega Express, Britdoc, Mail Users Association, Direct Marketing Association, Periodical Publishers' Association, British Printing Industries Federation, European Mail and Express Services Users Association.

In addition, my officials and the consultants appointed to advise the Government have met Business Post, Electronic Equipment Association, Mail Order Traders Association, BT, Girobank and other Government Departments.

A variety of published sources have been used as well as information provided by the Post Office and the Government.

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish the results of the review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office.

Mr. Leigh: The review is not yet complete. We will announce its conclusions in due course.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the limit he has announced on public sector pay increases for the current year is applicable to employees of (a) Parcelforce, (b) the Royal Mail and (c) Post Office Counters; and what account will be taken of offers already made to representatives of staff.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The pay policy announced by my right hon. Friend will apply to all public sector pay settlements over the next 12 months including those employed by public corporations such as the Post Office.

The recent formal pay offer made to Royal Mail employees with effect from 1 October this year will be honoured since negotiatiions have already been completed, but their October 1993 pay settlement will be constrained by the pay policy.

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial benefit accrued to Post Office

Letters, Post Office Counters and Parcelforce as a result of their holiday from paying contributions as employer to the superannuation funds of their respective employees during each year since 1987.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The financial benefits accruing from reductions in the employer's contribution to the Post Office staff superannuation scheme for each year since 1987 are as follows:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Royal Mail	Nil	13	29	106	105
Post Office Counters	Nil	2	5	16	15
Parcelforce	Nil	1	2	9	8

There have been no reductions during this period to the employer's contribution to the Post Office pension scheme.

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial subventions other than a contributions holiday Post Office letters, Post Office Counters and Parcelforce have received from the superannuation funds of their respective employees.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 17 November 1992]: None.

Refuse-to-energy Incinerator, Belvedere

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the inspector's report from the public inquiry into the proposed refuse-to-energy incinerator in Belvedere.

Mr. Eggar: The inquiry is still sitting. The timing of his report is a matter for the inquiry inspector.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Robathan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made towards achieving the Government's objective of working towards a figure of 1000 MW of electricity generating capacity from renewable energy sources by the year 2000; whether he expects that target to be met; and what impact the non-fossil fuel obligation will have on its achievement.

Mr. Eggar: Contracts in England and Wales for more than 500 MW of new renewables-based generation capacity were signed in the first two rounds of the non-fossil fuel obligation, of which 185 MW should be operational by the end of the current financial year, with a further 350 MW scheduled for further years. Seven MW of that NFFO capacity have been withdrawn. Some 6 MW of new capacity were also contracted in Scotland under transitional arrangements. Further new NFFO capacity in England and Wales, capacity which might be expected under NFFO-type arangements in Scotland and in Northern Ireland, and some non-grid-connected capacity, will help the United Kingdom in working towards 1000 MW of new renewables-based capacity in the United Kingdom by the year 2000, as specified in the 1990 White Paper on the environment.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the renewable energy advisory group to submit its report; and whether he will publish it.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 2 November 1992, Official Report, column 60.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the availability beyond 1998 in other EC member states of financial support equivalent to the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Eggar: The energy technology support unit, on behalf of the DTI, will be conducting a detailed assessment in the coming year of arrangements in other EC member states for the development of the market for electricity from renewable sources of energy. The assessment, which will cover any termination date for such support, will be published when completed.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider decoupling incentives for renewable energy sources from support given to nuclear energy.

Mr. Eggar: Proceeds from the levy on almost all sales of electricity to final customers in England and Wales are used to fund the supply of electricity from both nuclear and renewable sources. However, this support for nuclear is not given at the expense of that for renewables. My Department is in discussion with the European Commission about support for renewables after 1998.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to prepare British enterprises for the introduction of EC environmental auditing standards.

Mr. Eggar: A proposal for an EC regulation which would introduce a voluntary environmental management and auditing scheme is presently under discussion by the EC Environment Council. The proposal, which has been the subject of extensive consultation with United Kingdom business, would permit appropriate industry standards for environmental management to be used as a basis for the scheme.

In the United Kingdom, the British Standards Institution is currently piloting such a standard, BS7750, among some 150 businesses including a number of small firms. My Department has also initiated or participated in a number of seminars to alert businesses to the provisions of the EC scheme and the existence of BS7750.

Disconnections

Ms. Gordon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the number of disconnections of domestic (a) gas and (b) electricity supply during 1991 broken down into (i) standard region, (ii) utility region and (iii) local authority district.

Mr. Eggar: Disconnection figures are kept by the Office of Gas Supply, the Gas Consumers Council and the office of Electricity Regulation. However, I can confirm that 18,631 gas and 38,720 electricity customers were disconnected during 1991.

Opencast Coal

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the annual level of production of opencast coal in England, Wales and Scotland in each year since 1983-84.

Mr. Eggar: The annual production of opencast coal in England, Wales and Scotland between 1983-84 and 1991-92 was as follows:

Thousand tonnes

Year	England	Wales	Scotland	Total production
1983-84	10,221	1,547	3,031	14,799
1984-85	10,127	1,738	2,640	14,550
1985-86	10,009	2,174	3,081	15,264
1986-87	10,093	1,523	2,970	14,586
1987-88	11,352	1,677	3,347	16,376
1988-89	12,104	1,748	4,151	18,003
1989-90	12,413	2,088	4,115	18,616
1990-91	12,034	1,865	4,372	18,271
1991-92	11,605	2,402	5,012	19,019

Department of Energy Staff

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reduction in former Department of Energy personnel (a) has taken place and (b) is envisaged as a consequence of the incorporation of the former Department of Energy into his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The merger enabled the Department to reduce immediately the overhead costs of common functions and services and further rationalisations and savings continue to be made. These savings have been used to strengthen the Department's sponsorship of British industry through the creation of a number of sectoral divisions. No staff have been made redundant, although many are now doing different jobs within the Department and in response to the new priorities which Ministers have set.

Property Misdescriptions Act 1991

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to implement the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991.

Mr. Leigh: My hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms has laid before Parliament today an order which will give effect to the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991.

Finding the right property is never easy, and people need to be able to rely on what they are told about property offered for sale. Nobody wants to waste time travelling to view properties which, had the particulars been accurate, he or she would have ruled out as unsuitable.

The Property Misdescriptions (Specified Matters) Order 1992 lists those characteristics of property which it will be an offence to misdescribe. These "specified matters" cover most characteristics of property commonly included in estate agents' particulars of sale.

The Act does not require information to be supplied in respect of these matters, but if an agent chooses to provide information then it must not be false or misleading.

Offences under the Act will attract a maximum fine of £5,000 on conviction before a magistrates court and an unlimited fine on conviction before a Crown court. The Act will be enforced by local authority trading standards officers—in Northern Ireland, by officers of the Department of Economic Development trading standards branch.

My hon. and noble Friend has also laid before Parliament today a further order under the Estate Agents Act 1979.

The Estate Agents (Specified Offences) (No. 2) (Amendment) Order 1992 adds offences under the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991 to those offences which can give rise to the issue of prohibition or warning notices against estate agents by the Director General of Fair Trading.

Both orders will come into force on 4 April 1993.

Cosmetics (Animal Tests)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the United Kingdom Government's position on proposals put forward by the European Parliament and Commission to phase out the use of animals to test cosmetics by 1 January 1998 when they were discussed by COREPER—the Committee of Permanent Representatives in September.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 3 November 1992]: The United Kingdom position at the COREPER meeting on 16 September to discuss the proposed sixth council amendment to the directive on cosmetics was that tests on live animals for testing the safety of cosmetic ingredients should be phased out as soon as there are suitable validated alternatives. The Council has now reached a political agreement on a common position which includes a ban on the use of ingredients tested on animals after 1 January 1998, with a provision for the Commission to propose the postponement of the ban, in respect of the continuing need for particular tests, if alternative testing methods are not available by then.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of the representations he received to his consultation paper on assisted areas advocated (a) the creation of further development areas, (b) the creation of intermediate areas, (c) the maintenance of the status quo, (d) the reduction of development areas and (e) the reduction of intermediate areas.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 16 November 1992]: My ministerial colleagues and I have received a number of representations relating to particular areas. All have advocated either development or intermediate area status for their respective areas; which may involve upgrading from non-assisted area status, upgrading of existing assisted areas status, or the maintenance of the status quo. No representations have advocated reduced coverage.

British Coal

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish details of the current level of public subsidy to British Coal, together with a schedule of payments made in each of the last 12 months, specifying on which vote these payments are borne.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The current provision for assistance to the coal industry is contained in class V, vote 1 of the Supply estimates 1992-93. Section B of this vote provides for grant payments to British Coal in 1992-93 of £571·8 million. Grant payments since October 1991 have been as follows:

October 1991	33·6
November 1991	42·8
December 1991	39·2
January 1992	51·3
February 1992	35·8
March 1992	133·2
April 1992	203·2
May 1992	95·9
June 1992	14·2
July 1992	30·9
August 1992	46·4
September 1992	53·2

In addition to Government financial support, British Coal has been benefiting from the high margins, over and above world market prices, that the electricity generators pay for their coal supplies from the corporation. Under present contracts, which have been operating since April 1990, this assistance amounts to about £1 billion annually.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Dip

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of adverse human reactions to organophosphorus sheep dip have been reported in the last two years.

Mr. Soames: During 1991, a total of 135 reports involving suspected human adverse reactions to organophosphorus sheep dips were received. For 1992, a total of 121 reports have been received up to 9 November. A significant proportion of the reports received since 1990 are historical cases where a suspected adverse reaction had occurred more than one year previously.

Diet

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the figures of consumption of essential foods for a healthy diet, for families with children under five years in (a) the richest income groups and (b) the poorest income groups; and if he will subdivide these figures by region.

Mr. Soames: All foods can be components of a healthy diet. No single food is essential. It is the overall balance of foods—and so of nutrients—which is important. The Ministry's national food survey does not separate families with children under five from families with older children, but the results do indicate that in general the diets of families in all income groups and regions contain adequate levels of minerals and vitamins, but rather more fat and less fibre than that recommended by the Chief Medical Officer's Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy in its report on dietary reference values published in 1991. As part of a separate study, the Government are currently measuring the diets and health status of children under five years in all regions and income groups. It is planned to publish the results from this in 1994.

Pesticides

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he gives on the use of chemicals to control aphis gossypii; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The melon and cotton aphid—Aphis gossypii—has become a significant problem in some edible and ornamental glasshouse crops because of its ability to develop resistance to certain chemical pesticides. The Agricultural Development Advisory Service advises growers that effective chemical control is possible by the approved use of nicotine aphicides. Non-chemical controls, such as the controlled use of predatory and parasitic organisms, have also proved to be effective for some crops. The Ministry and the Horticultural Development Council are currently funding a number of research projects aimed at improving and developing such biological controls.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make representations to the pesticide industry to ensure that compensation is paid to victims of drinking water contaminated with atrazine and simazine.

Mr. Soames: The independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides concluded in May that levels of atrazine and simazine found in water do not endanger the health of consumers at the concentrations found in the United Kingdom. Furthermore, the chief inspector of the drinking water inspectorate, in his report for 1991, concluded that the amounts of pesticides ingested in drinking water were far smaller than the amounts which are known to be harmful or likely to cause harm. There is, therefore, no justification for representations of the kind suggested.

Foxes

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many complaints his Department has received in each of the last five years on fox predation.

Mr. Soames: There is no requirement to notify the Department of instances of fox predation. Those suffering losses of livestock, poultry of game, are free to exercise control as long as they do not use a prohibited method.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to offer grant aid to abattoirs to meet latest EC standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Department has no plans to offer grant aid to abattoirs which need to upgrade to meet the new EC standards.

Compliance with statutory requirements has never brought with it any guarantee of help to defray the costs involved. The provision of grant aid would be quite unfair on those who have already made the commitment of their own funds to come up to standard.

Private Detectives

Mr. Denham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Curry: None. The only use of such agencies by the Department since 1979 has been for the purpose of tracing debtors. Such use ceased in 1987. Information as to the dates and cases is not available centrally and its extraction from the files would be disproportionate in time and resources.

Agriculture Council

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 16 and 17 November.

Mr. Gummer: I chaired this meeting of the Council at which my hon. Friend the Minister of State in my Department represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed the general agreement on tariffs and trade Uruguay round and the EC/US oilseeds dispute in the light of well-publicised, negative comments from some parts of the Community. Following a vigorous discussion, I was able to record unanimous agreement in the Council that the Commissioner should negotiate with the United States consistently within the conclusions of the recent Birmingham summit. These provide for the Commission to be instructed actively to pursue a settlement. I understand negotiations will in fact resume later today.

The Council agreed a 7 per cent. devaluation of the green pound to take effect immediately. This is a necessary step since charges on intra-community trade, like monetary compensatory amounts, will not be possible in the single market from 1 January 1993, and the knowledge that green and market rates will be aligned by that date was acting as an incentive to speculation. The move will be widely welcomed by British farmers; when fully worked through it will add less than 1 per cent. to the food price index.

The Council also agreed the principal regulation on the control of payments under the reformed common agricultural policy. This is a major step toward combating the possibility of fraud in the new system.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Exchange Rate

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what details he has of the exchange controls in force in other EC countries.

Mr. Nelson: The 1988 capital liberalisation directive (88/361/EEC) prohibits exchange controls between member states, except in certain limited circumstances. However, four member states—Ireland, Greece, Portugal and Spain—enjoy a derogation which allows them to retain certain restrictions. In the case of Ireland and Spain, the remaining restrictions are due to be lifted by the end of this year. In the case of Portugal and Greece, the restrictions may be retained up to the end of 1995 if the Council agrees an extension to their derogations.

Deputy Secretaries

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officials at deputy secretary level in the Treasury (a) have a degree in economics (b) were educated at state schools and (c) went to Oxbridge, as a percentage of all deputy secretaries in the Treasury.

Mr. Nelson: Of the Treasury officials at grade 2—deputy secretary—level, 50 per cent. have a degree in economics, 50 per cent. were educated at state schools and 33 per cent. went to Oxbridge.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Nelson: None.

Bank of England

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the job specification of the Governor of the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement of his previous experience and professional qualifications.

Mr. Nelson: The Bank of England Act 1946 and the Bank's charter provide for the office of Governor. The charter requires the Governor to render his exclusive services to the bank.

The present Governor is a qualified lawyer and has served as a director and chairman of a number of industrial, commercial and financial companies.

VAT

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of value added tax which will be paid in respect of community care.

Sir John Cope: No such estimate has been made, but no change in the tax on domiciliary care is anticipated as a result of the transfer of resourcing from DSS to local authorities.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much VAT was collected in 1991-92 on domiciliary care charges.

Sir John Cope: No estimates have been made of the VAT collected on domiciliary care charges.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the criteria for exemption from VAT.

Sir John Cope: VAT is a wide-ranging tax on consumer expenditure with strictly limited reliefs. Exemptions from VAT are provided for under schedule 6 to the Value Added Tax Act 1983. They refelct the United Kingdom's obligations under article 13 of the EC sixth VAT directive, subject to the transitional derogations in article 28. Article 13 specifies two categories:

A. Exemptions for certain activities in the public interest, for example health, education, postal services.

B. Other exemptions.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek an amendment to the EC sixth directive in order to remove all domiciliary care costs from VAT.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend has no plans to seek such an amendment.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research has been done to identify and quantify the effect on the level of VAT and excise revenue resulting from the introduction of the single market on 1 January 1993.

Sir John Cope: The Cecchini report assessed the benefits of introducing a single European market. It did not specifically address the impact on VAT and excise revenues. It estimated that, in the medium-term, the single market could boost gross domestic product growth across the European Community by an average of 4·5 per cent. Growth of this order would provide a significant boost to VAT and excise receipts.

The introduction of the single market may give rise to some revenue loss in the United Kingdom. We estimate that the increase in cross-border shopping resulting from the abolition of intra-EC travellers' allowances will give rise to a revenue loss of around £250 million.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans Customs and Excise have to issue a VAT payers charter setting out standards of service to VAT payers.

Sir John Cope: The taxpayers charter, which was launched jointly by Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue, initially in 1986, and updated in 1991, sets out standards that taxpayers, including payers of VAT, can expect. In addition, Customs and Excise launched its VAT charter standard document on 22 September 1992. It sets out in more detail service standards for VAT.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many additional VAT inspectors' posts were identified by the Customs and Excise 1991-92 management plan as being necessary to deal with increased potential for VAT fraud under the single market; how many will actually be appointed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how far Customs and Excise will be able to give extra attention to those businesses involved in intra-EC trade without reducing the number of visits and controls to those traders not involved in inter-EC trade.

Sir John Cope: The 1991-92 management plan did not quantify the additional posts to be allocated for reinforcing controls on intra-Community traders. Some 200 new posts will be created for control visiting in 1993-94. It will be for local managers to determine how best to deploy these relative to all revenue risks, whether flowing from the single market or not. Overall, Customs and Excise expects that control of the new arrangements for intra-EC trade, together with closer attention to the interpretation of VAT liability law, will increase the move towards longer and more thorough visits, and reduce to some extent the coverage of less risky traders.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action is being taken to ensure that companies do not supply false information to the new VAT information exchange system, in collusion with trading partners in Europe in order to evade VAT.

Sir John Cope: The information supplied to the VAT information exchange system will be tested on visits to traders. Collusion frauds will be combated through greater use of mutual assistance arrangements between member states and the development of Community-wide intelligence systems.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how far the risk analysis system used by Customs and Excise for VAT control visiting is restricted to determining the relative risk of different traders rather than the overall risk to the revenue.

Sir John Cope: In deploying the resources available for control visiting, Customs and Excise analyses the relative risk to the revenue presented by different traders. This includes allocating resources to those traders with the greatest tax throughput to protect the overall risk to the revenue.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, column 38, what assessment was made of the effect of a 40 per cent. cut in the number of planned VAT inspections on deterrence, tax compliance and overall tax yield in the longer term before departing from the 1991-92 management plan.

Sir John Cope: In reducing to about 300,000 the planned number of control visits for 1993-94, Customs and Excise estimated that there could be a drop in the additional liability readily identifiable on visits, but that the move towards longer and more thorough visits would have a strong preventive effect and provide good protection of the overall tax yield.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the targets applied by Customs and Excise in the last five financial years for the length of time after registration for all traders to be visited.

Sir John Cope: In 1988-89 and 1989-90 Customs and Excise's target was to visit each trader within 15 to 18 months of VAT registration. In 1990-91 the Department improved the target to 12 to 15 months for high-risk traders while relaxing the deadline for the remainder to 21 to 24 months. In 1991-92 it introduced more fine-tuning into the risk analysis of the newly registered trader population, and now visits traders at three intervals of no more than 12 to 15, 21 to 24 and 33 to 36 months.

Illicit Trade

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs and Excise officers are to be trained to act as verification officers to deal with illicit trade in duty free and duty paid goods after 1 January 1993.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise staff currently employed on excise control work are already experienced in detecting illicit trade in excise goods. This sector is being reinforced, initially by 120 staff, who have been specially selected for further specific training in countering the new revenue risks following completion of the single market. The ongoing training programme, which will be made available to further selected staff as necessary, will also be continuously reviewed and adapted in the light of developments.

Private Detectives

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Nelson: None.

Home Income Plans

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral statement of the Economic Secretary to the Treasury, of 8 July, Official Report, column 367, what progress has been made in paying compensation to those who suffered loss through the purchase of home income plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Ten members of the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association who were involved in marketing home income plans have been declared in default by the investors compensation scheme. The ICS has made firm offers to some 250 investors in home income plans and in a further 400 cases has confirmed to investors that they are eligible for compensation. In addition, payments have been made to some 800 investors by members of the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) company directors and (b) employees were prosecuted, and what was the average fine imposed on those convicted in each case, under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, in each year since 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is not possible to specify the number of prosecutions against company directors alone. However, section 37 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 permits the prosecution of any director, manager, secretary or other corporate official for offences committed by the company. Section 7 of the 1974 Act provides for prosecutions of employees. Tables showing the number of prosecutions since 1 January 1981 under these two sections follow. The information requested is not readily available for the years before 1981.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the capital cost estimate for the FOCUS installation in the Health and Safety Executive; and how many fewer people will be employed as a result of this installation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The capital cost estimate for the FOCUS installation is £2·62 million.

The Health and Safety Executive has no current plans to employ fewer people as a result of the introduction of FOCUS.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will deposit copies of the Health and Safety Commission's advisory committee on toxic substances' and working group on the assessment of toxic chemicals minutes for each year since 1974 in the Library.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. For reasons of commercial confidentiality and for other reasons such minutes may not be suitable for disclosure and members of these bodies participate in discussions on that understanding. However, the Health and Safety Executive, which provides the secretariat for both bodies, publishes their forward work programme and related issues in the "Toxic Substances Bulletin" consultation papers on proposals for occupational exposure limits and synopses of the data used. From January 1993 the executive will publish the full scientific data used for the substance reviews carried out by the working group.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff in the Health and Safety Executive currently in the executive officer and higher executive officer grades have not been through a formal promotion board for that grade as in other parts of the Department of Employment group.

Mr. McLoughlin: Four administrative officers were substantively promoted in 1991 to executive officer in the ADP specialism without appearing before an Employment Department group promotions panel. These arrangements were made under the provisions of Treasury circular GEN 89/23.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the Health and Safety Executive staff are planned to be surplus to requirements in fiscal year 1994-95 in area offices as a result of the introduction of the FOCUS computer system.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has no plans to consider any staff as surplus to requirements in the fiscal year 1994-95 in HSE area offices as a result of the introduction of the FOCUS computer system.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the lease expires on the Health and Safety Executive London headquarters at Baynards House, London and what discussions the executive has had on the relocation of the headquarters to (a) London Docklands or (b) Bootle.

Mr. McLoughlin: The lease on Baynards house expires on 24 March 1994. The executive has had a number of discussions to consider the options for the housing of its London headquartes after March 1994. These include London docklands but not Bootle.

Mr. Galbriath: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many offences, and how many (a) custodial and (b) suspended sentences for offences, were recorded under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, in each year since 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following table shows the number of convictions obtained by the enforcing authorities for breaches of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and associated legislation for each year since 1 January 1975, when the Act came into force.

In 1985, a director received a suspended custodial sentence for a health and safety offence. The same penalty was imposed on another director in 1987.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) fines and (b) fines on indictment were imposed under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 in each year since 1974; and what was the average amount of fine in each case.

Mr. McLoughlin: Although most convictions for a health and safety offence result in a fine, it is not possible to identify the precise number. However, in calculating the average it has been assumed that all convictions result in a fine. A following table shows the average fine imposed by all courts for health and safety offences following proceedings by Health and Safety Executive (HSE) inspectorates for each year since 1975. Information about fines imposed as a result of proceedings brought by local authorities is not available. However, the number of convictions obtained by all enforcing authorities is available and I refer the hon. Member to my earlier reply to him.

A further table provides details of average fines on indictment since April 1988. It is not possible to provide a reliable analysis of proceedings in the higher courts for earlier years.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies are expected arising from the market testing privatisation of the electrical equipment certification service at Buxton, the graphics messenger, catering, security and any other internal services currently carried out at the Bootle or Baynards house headquarters of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) catering services in Bootle and London are already contracted out.

No decision has been taken on the future status of HSE's electrical equipment certification service nor have planned market tests in any of the other areas of work mentioned progressed so far as to make it possible to assess whether redundancies might result.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give (a) the total number, (b) the subject area, (c) the reference number and (d) the results of the cases taken to an industrial tribunal under the Safety Representative and Safety Committee Regulations 1977 for each year since 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations 1977 came into force on 1 October 1978. Central statistics are available only for applications registered, and before 1983 these were not broken down by subject. The following table dealing with industrial tribunal cases in England, Scotland and Wales under these regulations gives information on the outcome of applications which is readily available.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will establish an inquiry into the recruitment and promotion activities within the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Employment, has no plans to establish an inquiry into the recruitment and promotion activities within the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will place in the Library copies of the Health and Safety Executive's field operations division plan of work for 1993-94 and beyond.

Mr. McLoughlin: Divisional plans of work are internal documents which are discussed with the executive and are used to prepare the Health and Safety Commission's plan of work.

The commission's plan of work for 1993-94 will be submitted to the Secretary of State for approval and published in spring. A copy will as usual be placed in the Library.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to allow the TECs more flexibility within their training budgets so that they can pay higher unit placement rates to the providers of quality engineering training.

Mr. McLoughlin: TECs have the flexibility to allocate funds to their training providers in the light of local labour market conditions and needs. A TEC is free to take into consideration the differing costs of training in the various occupational categories when determining the payment arrangements for each of its training providers.

Private Detectives

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions since 1979 her Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if she will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Department group has not engaged private detective agencies since 1979.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to publish new citizens charters; and if he will list the areas to be covered.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter is a programme of continuous improvement. As targets are set and met, they will be reviewed and improved upon. We will also look to extend service standards into new areas of public service. We plan in the next year to publish a courts charter for England and Wales; a further and higher education charter; a revised parents charter, including improved standards of service; a revised Customs and Excise travellers charter; and heritage charters, to be issued by Cadw, Welsh Historic Monuments and Historic Scotland.

The patients charter will be extended to cover primary health care.

In addition, the following charters will be published in Northern Ireland: a bus passengers charter; Royal Ulster Constabulary charter; and a Northern Ireland courts service charter.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all those public bodies that have published charters as part of the citizens charter initiative.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following public bodies have published charters as part of the citizens charter initiative:

Charter Marks

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what account is taken of whether local authorities have had their community charge capped in deciding on their eligibility to apply for a charter mark award.

Mr. Waldegrave: The charter mark scheme is open to public sector organisations. The only criteria for eligibility are that the organisation provides a direct service to the public, and is managerially and financially autonomous.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of requiring there to be an in-house bid against which private sector bids will have to compete in any market test of central Government functions or services.

Mr. Waldegrave: In-house staff are encouraged to put forward bids for market tested functions on the same basis and in the same time scale as private sector contractors. Managers are given as much flexibility as possible to propose value for money improvements in service delivery. Internal and external bids are assessed against the same criteria.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Agencies

174. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The chief executives of the Central Office of Information, the Civil Service College, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, the Occupational Health Service and the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency are responsible for health and safety policy within their agencies.

I am placing in the Library copies of the health and safety policies applying in the Central Office of Information and Her Majesty's Stationery Office. I am also placing in the Library a copy of volumn IV of the Cabinet Office staff handbook, which contains the Cabinet Office's health and safety policy. This will continue to apply in the Civil Service College, the Occupational Health Service and the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency until separate health and safety policies have been developed and put in place.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 17 November Official Report, column 104. The procedures I outlined there will apply to the five executive agencies for which I am responsible—the Central Office of Information, the Civil Service College, HMSO, the Occupational Health Service and Recruitment and Assessment Services. An announcement about the future status of each agency will be made at the appropriate time.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those executive agencies that have amended their original framework documents since their establishment.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 19 June 1992, Official Report, column 685. While this is primarily a matter for departmental Ministers and chief executives of the agencies for which they are responsible, I understand that the following agencies have had their original framework documents amended: Companies House; the Patent Office; the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre; and the Vehicle Inspectorate.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the function of the Porton Down chemical defence establishment once the chemical weapons convention has been signed and ratified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: After ratification of the chemical weapons convention the chemical and biological defence establishment, Porton Down will still need to carry out research and development in order to provide effective protection measures for the United Kingdom armed forces against the threat of chemical or biological weapons. This defensive capability will complement the deterrent effect of the convention. In this field as well as in its continuing activities in support of chemical and biological arms control, the establishment will contribute to our security in a period when large quantities of chemical weapons will be awaiting destruction and some countries of concern may still be outside the regime.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which facility will be chosen as the United Kingdom's single small-scale facility under the terms of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We expect this to be a specialist laboratory and associated storage buildings at the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which chemicals or chemical precursors that are subject to export controls exercised by the Australia Group are not covered by the present text of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The text of the chemical weapons convention prohibits chemical weapons. This includes all toxic chemicals and their precursors unless intended, and in appropriate types and quantities, for permitted purposes. The convention therefore covers all the toxic chemical precursors subject to Australia group controls, although 18 of these chemicals are not subject to the declaration requirements and monitoring regime of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the entire site of the United Kingdom's chosen single small-scale facility will be subject to safeguards under the terms of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is a matter delegated to the chemical and biological defence establishment under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from Dr. Graham S. Pearson to Mr. Calum Macdonald, dated 18 November 1992:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if the entire site of the United Kingdom's chosen single small-scale facility will be subject to safeguards under the terms of the Chemical Weapons Convention (Question 20, Order Paper 10 November 1992) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The single small-scale facility to be declared under the Chemical Weapons Convention is likely to be a small area within the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment in which small quantities of Schedule 1 chemicals are prepared and stored. These small amounts of Schedule 1 chemicals are required to enable the United Kingdom to carry out its programme to provide effective protective measure for members of the United Kingdom Armed Forces against the threat that they may be exposed to chemical or biological weapons.

3. The area within the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment declared as the United Kingdom's small-scale facility will be subject to inspection and monitoring in accordance with the terms of the Chemical Weapons Convention concerning such small-scale facilities.

4. The remainder of the site of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, as for any other site within the United Kingdom, will be liable to inspection under other provisions of the Chemical Weapons Convention.

Royal Naval Reserve

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the future viability of the Royal Naval Reserve;

(2) if he will make it his policy that the Royal Naval Reserve will continue to have a seagoing role.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) on 13 November 1992 at column 1007-08.

Reserve Forces

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's tri-service study of the reserves which was completed in February.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The main conclusions and proposals of the Regular/Reserve Force mix study were published in March 1992 in the open government document "The Future of Britain's Reserve Forces", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Only those elements of the study that are classified on security grounds were not included in the open government document.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Aitken: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Gentleman.

RAF Welford

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proportion of the munitions currently stored at RAF Welford are now unstable;

(2) what studies have been undertaken regarding the safe disposal of unstable munitions at RAF Welford.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no unstable munitions at RAF Welford. The need for studies into their safe disposal does not therefore arise.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of RAF Welford.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States Department of Defense has already announced plans for the partial return of RAF Welford to MOD control in December 1992. The MOD is considering whether there is a continuing defence requirement for that part of the site which is being returned. No decisions have yet been taken.

RNSD Eaglescliffe

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will set out the differences between budget and outturn figures in each of the last five years for MEE and MES expenditure mentioned in annex A, paragraph 17, page A2 of the consultation paper on the future of RNSD Eaglescliffe;

(2) if he will specify the tasks to be undertaken by the 15 additional managerial staff grade liaison posts mentioned in annex A, paragraph 16, page A4 of the consultation document on the future of RNSD Eaglescliffe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Bosnia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British helicopter gunships have been deployed to protect United Kingdom forces escorting those supplying humanitarian relief, by road or air, in Bosnia; and how many British fighter aircraft have been deployed to Bosnia to monitor air exclusion zones and other duties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No helicopter gunships or fighter aircraft have been deployed to Bosnia in support of the United Kingdom contingent or any other element of the UN protection force. The United Kingdom is taking part in surveillance and monitoring activity by the NATO airborne early warning force which is supporting the naval monitoring operation in the Adriatic and is monitoring compliance with Security Council resolution 781.

Iraq

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the information available to him from aircraft surveillance about the deployment and operations of Iraqi ground forces in southern Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Tornado operations, in association with those of our coalition partners, confirm that the Iraqi army is deployed in considerable strength in southern Iraq. There is some indication of small-scale activity around the periphery of the marshlands but no evidence of any renewal of major offensive operations.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to the United Kingdom so far of monitoring Iraqi compliance with United Nations resolution 688; and whether the United Kingdom will receive any financial assistance to cover the costs of monitoring Iraqi compliance with United Nations resolution 688.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: So far the United Kingdom has committed additional expenditure of some £11 million on operations to ensure Iraqi compliance with United Nations resolution 688. At present the United Kingdom has not received any financial assistance with these costs.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there have been any occasions when Iraqi anti-aircraft radar has locked on to RAF flights operating over southern Iraq under United Nations resolutions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to release operational details of this sort.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the source of the technology used by the Iraqi defence industry to manufacture artillery shells.

Mr. Aitken: On the evidence available over 20 countries, including the United Kingdom, provided Iraq with dual-use technology which could have been used in the manufacture of artillery or other weapons systems.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sorties have been flown by RAF (a) Tornado GR1, (b) Tornado GR1a and (c) VC-10 aircraft monitoring Iraqi compliance with United Nations resolution 688 since 27 August.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Between 27 August 1992 and 16 November 1992 the RAF has flown the following numbers of sorties in respect of the no-fly zone over Iraq south of 32 degrees:

	Sorties
(a) Tornado GR1	87
(b) Tornado GR1a	47
(c) VC-10	85

Matrix Churchill

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessments have been made by his Department of the effect that the activities of the Matrix Churchill company have had on the development of the Iraqi defence industry.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has studied the Iraqi defence industry and its military procurement activity. No specific study, however, has been undertaken on the effect of the activities of individual United Kingdom companies on the development of the Iraqi defence industry.

Helicopters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 510, if he expects to place further orders for (a) EH101, (b) Lynx and (c) Sea King helicopters; when he expects those orders to be placed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The EH101 is being considered as an option for the support helicopter role, though we will not be in a position to take a procurement decision for some time. We have no plans to place further orders for Lynx. I announced the award of a contract for six new Sea King SAR helicopters on 28 October 1992, Official Report, column 710. The delivery date for these is 1995. There are no current plans for further Sea King orders.

Overseas Operations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 28 October, Official Report, columns 711-12, if he will explain the circumstances under which the Foreign Office subsequently refunds the costs of overseas operations incurred by his Department; and how this related to the costs of Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In accordance with established inter-departmental arrangements, MOD seeks the reimbursement of costs from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for overseas military operations which support United Nations peacekeeping activities. Where operational assistance is provided to friendly countries, as in the case of Operation Granby, the cost falls to MOD.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department uses one firm of process servers, who are also private detectives, but only in connection with the serving of legal documents. These documents are statutory demands and bankruptcy petitions for unpaid national insurance contributions and overpayments of benefit. The name of the firm used is being withheld for reasons of commercial confidence. Such information as is available is in the table.

	Times used	Cost £
1990	1,555	68,002·97
1989	920	45,115·24

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will uprate benefits made available to purchase domiciliary care, to take VAT into account.

Mr. Burt: There are no benefits that are specifically to cover the cost of domiciliary care: it is up to the individual to decide how best to spend any benefit he receives. However, attendance allowance and the care components of disability living allowance are available to people who need personal care. Similarly, the severe disability premium in income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit is available to severely disabled people who live alone and who are, therefore, likely to need to buy in care. These benefits are uprated regularly and the indices used reflect the movement in prices, inclusive of VAT.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of (a) raising the level of invalid care allowance to that of (i) retirement pension, (ii) unemployment benefit and (iii) two thirds national average earnings, (b)(i) increasing the earnings limit for invalid care allowance to the lower earnings limit for paying national insurance contributions and (ii) abolishing the earnings limit for invalid care allowance altogether and (c) continuing payment of invalid care allowance to carers for a period of (i) eight weeks and (ii) six months after they have finished caring.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the tables.

	£ million
a. The estimated cost of raising the level of invalid care allowance in 1992-93 to that of
i. Retirement pension	156
ii. Unemployment benefit	79
iii. two thirds national average earnings	1,284
c. The estimated cost of paying invalid care allowance after caring ceases for
i. eight weeks	8·2
ii. six months	26·5

Note: Data are not available on the number of potential claimants with earnings above the current earnings limit.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of (a) extending entitlement to the carer premium in income support to carers over 65 years who could establish underlying entitlement to invalid care allowance, (b) extending entitlement to invalid care allowance to those caring for a person who receives the lower rate care component of the disability living allowance and (c) restoring credits for short-term national insurance benefits through invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: Entitlement to the carer premium in income support depends upon entitlement to invalid care allowance which cannot be established after age 65. Data are not available to estimate the cost of extending the carer premium in this way.

The estimated cost of extending entitlement to invalid care allowance to those caring for a person who receives the lower rate component of disability living allowance would depend on the number of such beneficiaries who receive at least 35 hours care per week. The estimated maximum cost of this measure would be around £130 million in 1992-93.

Depending on eligibility criteria, credits already available to invalid care allowance recipients enable them to qualify for certain short-term national insurance benefits.

War Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when, following the judgment on 10 July in Regina v Secretary of State ex parte Edwards, he will revise the entitlement of those qualified by virtue of a diagnosis similar to or the same as in that case; how many claimants will be entitled to arrears of pension as a result of this revision and at what total cost; what steps his Department will take to inform claimants or potential claimants of their revised entitlement; and how soon arrears will be paid to those entitled to receive them.

Miss Widdecombe: A letter is to be sent to members of the Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions asking them to advise ex-service men and women that arrears may be payable to those awarded a war pension as a result of schizophrenia. Cases will be reviewed and any arrears paid once the War Pensions Directorate is made aware of appropriate cases. Information on the number of claimants who will benefit is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Private Detectives

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has not since 1979 engaged any private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens.

Benefits Agency, Lancashire

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to re-establish a Benefits Agency service in Darwen, Lancashire.

Mr. Burt: The provision of service outlets is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms. Janet Anderson, dated 17 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning plans to re-establish a Benefits Agency service in Darwen, Lancashire.

Surveys show that, increasingly, many of our customers prefer not to visit offices for advice or information but to telephone or write instead. However, a significant number of customers still feel happier conducting their business in person. In Districts covering large geographical areas travelling to the relevant main office may be difficult. For this reason some Districts offer limited caller facilities at outstations, giving customers in more remote parts easier access to face to face advice and information.

Darwen falls in the area covered by the Benefits Agency's Blackburn and Accrington District. I should explain that a DHSS (as it then was) caller outstation existed in Darwen up to 1985, when lack of demand for the facility led to its closure.

Recent planning exercises by the Blackburn and Accrington District, which involved consulting customers and other interested parties, showed that customer service could be improved by the re-establishment of an outstation in Darwen. Proposals for this have now been incorporated in the District's strategic plan for the next three years. There are, as you will appreciate, competing calls on a limited capital expenditure budget, and regrettably there can be no guarantee that the proposal will come to fruition in the next year or two. An alternative may be to use space in the Employment Services' office in Darwen, and this option is being looked at.

What I can say is that management and staff within the District are fully committed to the Agency's core value of Customer Service, and are determined to provide the service their customers want wherever possible. I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Community Care

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, columns 815-16, how much community care grant aid for child support remains available at (a) Sheffield West and (b) Sheffield East local offices at the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Helen Jackson, dated 17 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about community care grant (CCG) funds in Sheffield West and Sheffield East Districts.

CCGs are available to people who are receiving Income Support and people who are likely to receive Income Support on discharge from care, to help promote care in the community. This can include help for people to remain in the community rather than to enter institutional or residential care, help for people leaving such care and entering the community, and for families under exceptional pressure.

Allocations are made annually to each District for CCGs. District allocations are not divided between different categories of applicant. Details of allocations outstanding at the end of each month, for each Benefit Agency District, are placed in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. Copies of this letter are also being placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Electricity Generation

17. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the electricity generating regime for Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The electricity industry in Scotland has access to electricity generated from diverse sources—coal, nuclear, oil, gas and hydro. In terms of the nuclear energy agreement, Scottish Power and Scottish Hydro-Electric purchase for 15 years all the output from Scottish Nuclear Ltd., which remains in the public sector.

Radioactive Waste

18. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the long-term storage of waste radioactive material from sites in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: There is no long-term storage of radioactive waste material in Scotland from sites in Scotland. Some Scottish generated radioactive waste is transported to England for interim storage and final disposal. Quantities of such waste are also stored at various Scottish nuclear sites on an interim basis pending ultimate disposal.

Water

19. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to consult the general public with regard to water privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the statement on the future of the water and sewerage services in Scotland I made yesterday.

30. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his reasons for considering water privatisation in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made yesterday.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the most recent estimate of the total level of capital investment required to meet the EC municipal waste water treatment directive by each water authority.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 November 1992]: The estimated cost of capital investment required to meet the EC urban waste water treatment directive in each regional and islands council area is given in the table:

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of capital expenditure on (a) water supply, (b) sewerage and sewerage treatment and (c) total water and sewerage at (i) current prices and (ii) constant 1991-92 prices—using the GDP deflator—for each year since 1980-81 by each water authority and in total for Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Capital expenditure for water and sewerage services by regional councils for the period 1980-81 to 1991-92 is given in the tables. Separate water and sewerage figures by authority prior to 1985-86 are not available.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate his Department has made of the value of fixed assets and property held by each water authority.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Details of water authorities' fixed assets and property are not held centrally and no estimate of their value is available.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the unmeasured (a) water charge, (b) notional sewerage element and (c) total household water charges for each year since 1989-90 in the area covered by each water authority.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Water and sewerage is not charged on a household basis. Costs are met from the community water charges and, for domestic sewerage, through the community charge arrangements. Estimates of average expenditure on water and sewerage per household in each regional and islands council area are given in the tables.

Assisted Areas

Ms. Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the review of assisted area status and its particular implications for the Dunfermline travel-to-work area.

Mr. Stewart: The needs and problems of all areas, including Dunfermline, are being carefully considered in the review of assisted area status. Decisions on the designation of particular areas will be informed by an analysis of data on a range of relevant factors and by the responses to the consultation paper which my right hon. Friend issued in June.

Caithness and Sutherland

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has plans to visit Caithness and Sutherland to discuss the future of the local economy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit Caithness and Sutherland at present.

Nimmo Smith/Friel Report

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Nimmo Smith/Friel report of their review of the cases mentioned in a report to the chief constable of the Lothian and Borders police.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Nimmo Smith and Mr. Friel have not as yet completed their investigation nor reported to my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate. It is therefore not appropriate at this stage to make any statement.

Transport Links

23. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he proposes for improving transport links between Scotland, the rest of the United Kingdom and the European Community.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is undertaking a wide-ranging programme of trunk road improvements. The final sections to complete the dual carriageway link to Aberdeen are under construction and most significantly of all Scotland's main road artery south, the A74 is being totally reconstructed to extend the M6 north to Glasgow. My right hon. Friend is also working closely with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport to encourage, where appropriate, improved rail, air and, sea links to and from Scotland.

SCE Higher Grade

24. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made with plans to replace the SCE higher grade examination.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Howie committee published early this year its thorough and comprehensive review of curriculum and examinations in the upper secondary school. The future of the highers is of the first significance for Scottish education, and our decision to allow a consultation period running to December has been welcomed. We shall decide the way forward thereafter.

Private Health Insurance

25. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy with regard to the availability of national health service facilities to private health care insurance companies.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has delegated authority to health boards and NHS trusts to decide on the number and location of private beds in NHS hospitals. Beds are provided only when NHS services are not prejudiced.

Sunday Trading

26. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has recently received about Sunday trading.

Mr. Stewart: Since June 1992, my right hon. Friend has received three separate representations from one individual in support of the present arrangements for Sunday trading in Scotland.

Larne-Stranraer Ferry

27. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to upgrade road and rail links with Stranraer, to link with the increased use of the Larne-Stranraer ferry crossing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has already made significant progress in improving the trunk road network in the south west of Scotland. The A75 has been substantially upgraded in recent years. However, to alleviate some remaining operating difficulties further work is planned to improve safety and overtaking opportunities. In conjunction with the Department of Transport, my right hon. Friend and I will continue to ensure that the transport infrastructure needs of the area are fully identified.

Hospitals

29. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the public consultation process regarding applications for national health service trust status in the Argyll and Clyde health board area.

Mr. Stewart: An application for NHS trust status by the Royal Alexandra hospital, Paisley was issued for public comment by the Argyll and Clyde health board on 24 July. The three-month statutory consultation period expired on 26 October. A report by the health board on the consultation has been received and will be considered carefully by my right hon. Friend.

33. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public consultations the local health board has carried out on trust status for Renfrewshire hospitals.

Mr. Stewart: Public consultation on an application for NHS trust status by the Royal Alexandra hospital, Paisley was carried out between 24 July and 26 October in accordance with the National Health Service Trusts (Consultation before Establishment) (Scotland) Regulations 1991.

Local Government Reorganisation

31. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further discussions he has had with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities about his proposals for local government reorganisation.

Mr. Stewart: I recently chaired the first meeting of a steering group, comprising the president and other members of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, which is to review the internal management of local authorities. My right hon. Friend is also looking forward to receiving, in due course, a response from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to the consultation paper "Shaping the New Councils", which was published on 12 October 1992.

Fishing Industry

32. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the fishing industry; and if he will make a statement on the current implications for the Scottish fleet of current negotiations on the multi-annual guidance programme.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend and I meet representatives of the industry as and when required. My last formal meeting with the Scottish Fishermen's Federation was on 1 October. Negotiations on the United Kingdom's multi-annual guidance programme for 1993-96 will clearly have significant implications for the Scottish fleet. It is generally recognised that fishing effort is too high and has to be reduced, but it is equally important that the targets which emerge from these discussions are realistic. Negotiations are continuing on this basis.

Industrial Output and Employment

34. Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce in the near future an initiative to increase industrial output and employment.

Mr. Stewart: The measures announced in the autumn statement and my right hon. Friend's specific proposals for Scotland arising out of the public expenditure settlement will benefit the Scottish economy.

NHS Trusts

35. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many national health service trusts have been approved in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: Three trusts have been approved, two of which are currently operational. A further 14 applications are at various stages of the public consultation process.

Forestry Commission (Vehicles)

36. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vehicles the Forestry Commission operates; how many use unleaded petrol; how many are diesel; and how many vehicles are serviced by the private sector.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission owns and operates 2,239 road vehicles, of which 50 use unleaded petrol and 1,950 use diesel. The other 239, which use leaded petrol, will be replaced with diesel vehicles over the coming year. About one quarter of the servicing and maintenance of the commission's vehicles is carried out by the private sector.

Unemployment (Greater Glasgow)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many long-term unemployed there are in the Greater Glasgow area.

Mr. Stewart: The most recent available figures are those for the quarter ended in July 1992. They show that at that time there were in the Glasgow travel-to-work area 43,757 people—6·5 per cent. of the work force—who had been unemployed for six months or longer, of whom 28,968—4·3 per cent. of the work force—had been unemployed for 12 months or longer.

Governance

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out a timetable for the completion of his stocktaking exercise on the future governance of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I have given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Galloway).

Development Areas

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce the outcome of the review on development areas in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The public consultation paper on the review of the assisted areas map which my right hon. Friend issued in June stated that the Government's aim was to implement a revised map early in 1993, following the necessary clearance with the European Commission. This remains our intention.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Lang: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the three agencies in my Department. I have asked the chief executive of each of the agencies to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dr. R. K. M. Hay to Mr. John McAllion, dated 11 November 1992:

In response to your request to the Secretary of State for Scotland, I attach a copy of the policy statement for the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency. A copy will also be placed in the Library as requested.

Letter from Andrew MacLeod to Mr. John McAllion, dated 12 November 1992:

I have been asked to reply to your written parliamentary question asking the Secretary of State to place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency.

I enclose for your information a copy of our health and safety policy document. I have also arranged for copies to be available in the Library.

Letter from S. Rosie to Mr. John McAllion, dated 12 November 1992:

In the Director and Chief Executive's absence on business this week, I am responding to your recent parliamentary question and the Secretary of State's reply of 11 November.

A copy of Historic Scotland's Health and Safety Policy has been placed in the House of Commons Library. A copy is enclosed for ease of reference. This policy statement, introduced in June 1991, is backed up by a series of Instruction and Information sheets, covering all aspects of health and safety applicable to the Agency. A high priority is attached to health and safety. Our full-time Safety Officer continually monitors performance and implements any changes needed to comply with legislative requirements.

Fisheries Research Services

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future organisation of the Fisheries Research Services of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department.

Mr. Lang: I have decided that, under the next steps initiative, my officials should initiate formal consultations with the Office of Public Service and Science and Treasury with the view to Fisheries Research Services being a candidate for agency status.

Construction

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the details of the £70 million package of construction-related work which he announced following the Chancellor of the Exchequer's "Autumn Statement".

Mr. Lang: I have now decided on the £70 million package of measures to be undertaken in the current financial year to assist the Scottish economy.

I have distributed the resources between programmes to achieve a rapid impact on construction and related industries. As a result, a broad range of programmes is involved, and a large number of bodies in both central and local government will receive additions to their programmes for the current year.

I have allocated a total of £20 million for additional expenditure on housing. One component of this package will be £7·5 million for homelessness, which will be made available to local authorities on the basis of proposals I will ask them to submit by 11 December. The balance will be issued to local authorities as additional allocations. My hon. Friend the Minister for education and housing will be announcing the distribution to individual councils when he meets local authority representatives on Monday 23 November.

This housing package is, of course, in addition to the benefits which Scottish Homes will receive from the repayment of debt which I announced last week.

The remaining £50 million will be divided among several central and local government programmes. A total of £9·5 million will be given for special enterprise, economic development and environmental improvement projects to be undertaken by Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise, the new town development corporations and the urban regeneration initiatives.

The current year's trunk roads programme will be supplemented by £8·5 million, to allow additional starts on a number of schemes and on highly desirable maintenance and improvement works, including installation of more central reservation safety barriers. There will be an additional £5 million for local authority roads projects.

There will be an additional £10·25 million for the health service and social work capital programmes, to be spent on a large number of projects across the country, focusing on upgrading and maintenance works and works to improve energy efficiency. There will be an extra £5 million for capital expenditure on schools, including £400,000 for grant-aided schools not in the local authority sector.

A further £0·75 million will be used to expand the programme for modernisation of prisons. There will be £1 million extra for police capital expenditure, and an additional £2·5 million for local authority general services.

On the water and sewerage programme, I have allocated a further £6·5 million for projects in the current year to service new developments and to make continuing progress with environmental improvements.

I have also allocated £1 million additional provision for historic buildings repair grant.

I shall publish details of the individual allocations and projects to be supported as soon as possible.

This is a package specially designed to secure an immediate impact on the construction industry in all its sectors. It will bring employment opportunities where employment is most needed, and it will help continue the modernisation of Scotland's infrastructure. The work is to be completed by the end of March and I estimate that the package will sustain around 4,000 jobs directly and through suppliers over this period.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans for financing the upgrading of the A1 road to dual carriageway standard; and if he will make it his policy that no section of that trunk road will be subject to toll charges.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 November 1992]: On 7 July this year, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport, reaffirmed the Government's conclusion that it would be desirable to dual the whole of the A1 between Edinburgh and Newcastle. Very substantial progress is being made with improvements to the route and our present financial plans account for the dualling of half the length of the A1.

While the Government are encouraging the private sector to consider viable options for new toll roads, no such proposals have been received for the A1.

Council House Purchases

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will institute an inquiry into the incidence of proxy purchasing of council houses involving contracts between elderly tenants who qualify for the maximum discount under the right-to-buy legislation, and third parties outwith their families who provide the purchase price in return for a legal right to inherit the property; and if he will make a statement on the Government's view of this practice.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: [holding answer 16 November 1992]: I would welcome any specific information the hon. Member can provide me with on the details and extent of the practice he describes.

Nurses

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures to show (a) the total cost and (b) the average cost for each nurse of training registered general nurses for each of the past three years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 November 1992]: This information is not available.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures to show the numbers of nurses in training, the numbers of nurses who have completed registered general nurse training and the numbers of nurses who have completed registered general nurse training who have not obtained employment, in each of the past three years in Scotland; and if he will provide a breakdown by local health authority.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Figures showing the numbers of nurses in training in the NHS in Scotland are already contained in the annual publication "Scottish Health Statistics". A total of 1,936 nurses completed registered general nurse training in 1991-92.

Accurate information on the number of nurses who have completed registered general nurse training and who have sought and have not obtained employment in the NHS in Scotland is not available. The table can give only a broad indication. Those within the definition "not in NHS in Scotland" include, for example, those who have been unable to complete their training within the normal three-year period; those who, having qualified, may have chosen to have a break in service before seeking employment; those who have found employment as a nurse outwith the NHS or in England; those who may have qualified, joined the NHS and left within a census period, and those nurses converting to registered general from enrolled status. Those who qualify and work occasionally in the NHS, for example, bank or agency nurses, also cannot be identified and have therefore been counted with the "not employed" category.

Oral Cancer

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to reverse the current increase in the incidence of oral cancer in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Cancers and oral and dental health were identified as priorities in "Health Education in Scotland: A National Policy Statement" published in 1991. A major focus of activity in the programmes being developed by the Health Education Board for Scotland, will be on such risk factors as smoking and alcohol.

The crucial importance of detecting and treating pre-malignant and malignant conditions at an early stage is emphasised in dentists' training, and in a video issued by the Scottish Office Home and Health Department to all dental practices.

To ensure the highest standard of treatment, a Scottish cancer therapy network is being established. This will facilitate the exchange of information about clinical experience and practice in the treatment of all cancers to ensure that best practice is quickly recognised and spread throughout Scotland.

TRANSPORT

Shipping

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 20 October, Official Report, column 238, what proposals for encouraging the growth of the British and other European fleets he discussed with the Chamber of Shipping.

Mr. Norris: Discussions of the non-financial issues have centred on the main areas where we consider there is scope for international action, particularly opening up new opportunities for United Kingdom and Community shipowners in third countries, increasing competitiveness including tackling state aids and consistently enforcing high standards for all shipping.

Other issues discussed are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Private Detectives

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the authorisation of the employment of Bray's Detective Agency to investigate peaceful protesters at Twyford Down, Hampshire; when the agency was employed; what is the cost of the contract; and when is it due to end.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has employed Bray's Detective Agency (Southampton) Ltd. to serve papers on people who have trespassed on the Department's land and to photograph trespassers. The agency has been employed from time to time since March this year on an hourly basis at its standad rates, plus expenses. It will continue to be employed on this basis for as long as necessary.

Car Drivers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consideration he is giving to restricting the engine size of cars driven by fully qualified drivers (a) under the age of 22 years or (b) for newly qualified drivers over the age of 21 years for the first year after they have passed their driving test; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration he has given to introducing P plates to denote newly qualified drivers; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what measures he plans to introduce to reduce deaths and injuries as a result of driving errrors caused by drivers under the age of 22 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have commissioned an extensive research programme into the causes of accidents involving young and inexperienced drivers, with a view to developing a set of measures to reduce their high accident rate. Whether those measures suggested by the hon. Member are included will depend on how their likely effectiveness is assessed by that research.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what proportion of road accidents involved cars driven by (a) 17 to 21-year-olds, (b) 22 to 30-year-olds, (c) 31 to 40-year-olds, (d) 41 to 64-year-olds and (e) over 64-year-olds result in (i) death or (ii) personal injuries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proportion of road accidents involved cars driven by (a) 17 to 21-year-olds, (b) 22 to 30-year-olds, (c) 31 to 40-year-olds, (d) 41 to 64-year-olds and (e) over 64-year-olds.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information requested is contained in the table.

Speed Limits

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to increase the number of residential areas with 20 mph speed limits.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is for local traffic authorities to introduce these zones where appropriate, subject to the consent of the Secretary of State. Consent has been granted to 37 zones and no application has been refused.

We have issued advice to local authorities on how to establish a 20 mph zone. Such zones are eligible for transport supplementary grant when introduced to address a road accident problem.

HEALTH

Hospital Appointments

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures available for waiting lists for hospital appointments in London, by health district; and what are the comparable figures for 1991, 1990 and 1989.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 29 October 1992 at column 848 and the hon. Member for York (Mr. Bayley) on 12 November 1992 at column 951.

Morphine

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she intends to take to prevent unqualified assistants of general medical practitioners dispensing a concentrated oral solution of morphine sulphate to patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: The conditions under which a dispensing doctor employs another person to dispense on his behalf is a matter for that doctor. Under the common law, he owes a duty of care to his patients to ensure that he employs a competent dispenser.

London Ambulance Service

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulances the London ambulance service has; how many are less than two years old; and, of the rest, in which years they were registered.

Mr. Sackville: The London ambulance service currently has 816 ambulances consisting of 374 accident and emergency ambulances and 442 patient transport vehicles.

Information on the age of these ambulances is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. James Harris, the chairman of the London ambulance service, for details.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the number of 999 emergency calls received by the London ambulance service for the years 1980 to 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The information on emergency calls has been collected centrally since 1987-88. The available information is given in the table.

London Ambulance Service—Total number of emergency calls

	Number
1987-88	470,348
1988-89	451,150
1989-90[1]	231,294
1990-91	456,695
1991-92[2]	472,310

[1] As a result of industrial action in this period, the service was unable to provide a complete year's return. The figure shown represents approximately half the calls received.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the number of ambulances used by the London ambulance service for the years (a) 1970, (b) 1975, (c) 1980 and (d) each year from 1986 to 1991.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. James Harris, the chairman of the London ambulance service, for details.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what level the decision was taken for the purchase of the Leyland DAF vehicles as currently used by the London ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: The decision to purchase these particular vehicles was taken by the London ambulance service board following the evaluation of competitive tenders and field trials.

Land Sales

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the estimated income from land sales by each regional health authority in England in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what is the projected income for 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Total capital receipts, for each regional health authority, from all sales of land and property in 1989-90 and 1990-91 are shown in the table. Provisional estimates of receipts for 1991-92 and projected receipts for 1992-93 are also shown.

Private Detectives

9. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what use her Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if she will list the firms involved.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions since 1979 her Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if she will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Sackville: The Department's records do not show any use of private investigators during the period in question.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the bed complement at (a) the Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu hospital trust and (b) the Doncaster healthcare trust; and how many bed days have been lost since 1 April to date through (i) maintenance, (ii) refurbishment and (iii) lack of financial resources.

Mr. Sackville: The average number of beds available daily at the Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu hospital NHS trust at the end of March 1992 was 886. The remaining information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. C. Bryant, chairman of Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu hospital NHS trust, and Mr. P. Horsburgh, chairman of Doncaster healthcare NHS trust, for details.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for the creation of a class of community bed for treatment of patients outside the acute hospital sector; and what proportion of patients in such beds she envisages will be treated by (a) general practitioners, (b) district nurses and (c) other categories of carers; and if she will specify what other categories are contemplated.

Mr. Sackville: Community hospitals have played an important role in the national health service for many years. It is for each health authority to determine, through contracts with the providers of health care, the pattern of local services best suited to the needs of the communities they serve.

Charity Trust Funds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional and district health authority and health service trusts the charity trust fund balances at 31 March.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information derived from 1991-92 annual accounts submitted to the Department will be available later in the year.

Assisted Conception Unit, Walsgrave Hospital

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what fee the assisted conception unit at Walsgrave hospital pays to the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority each time a cycle of treatment is conducted; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Assisted conception units which carry out certain infertility treatments and embryo research have, under the terms of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, to be licensed by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. During the passage of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill it was accepted that applicants for licences should pay a significant part of the cost of licensing. The authority is therefore required to raise 50 per cent. of its costs through fees to licensed centres.

Licences are issued annually, with an initial fee on application of £250 for treatment licences and £100 for research or storage licences. Additional fees are charged to centres based on the numbers of treatment cycles performed in the year prior to application. The current figures are £30 per IVF—in vitro fertilisation—cycle and £7 per donor insemination cycle. Further details of the authority's licensing structure are contained in its annual report, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Brain-damaged Children

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the facilities and services provided for brain-damaged children by health authorities; and if she will issue instructions on minimum standards for the treatment of these children.

Mr. Yeo: District health authorities are responsible for assessing the health needs of their residents and purchasing a comprehensive range of services to meet those needs. These include a wide range of services, equipment and support for children with brain damage including child health surveillance, primary care, therapy services, wheelchairs and other equipment. Health authorities have a duty to ensure that they obtain the highest quality and most cost-effective care for all their residents, taking into account appropriate professional advice. We also expect them to collaborate with other service providers such as local education authorities and social services departments.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish by health authority and specialty the waiting lists for in-patient and out-patient treatment for 31 March 1992 and for 31 March 1989.

Mr. Sackville: Information about waiting times for in-patients by district health authority and specialty, is given in "Hospital Waiting List, In-Patients and Day Cases" published every six months, copies of which are available in the Library.

Information about waiting times for first out-patient appointment is not collected centrally. However, all health authorities are required under the patients charter to publish information on the local standards they have set for first out-patient appointments and on performance against targets.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines she has issued to health authorities regarding the appropriate waiting time for a first opthalmic out-patient appointment;

(2) if she will introduce into the patients charter a standard for waiting time for a first out-patient appointment.

Mr. Sackville: Under the patients charter, health authorities are already setting local standards for waiting times for first out-patient appointments and regional health authorities have been asked to set targets to build on this progress.

Dentistry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number and percentage of pupils in Lancashire inspected and re-inspected by the school dental service in 1979 and the most recent year for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of inspections and re-inspections by the community dental services in Lancashire in the year ending 31 March 1990 were 81,017 and 11,684 respectively. Comparable figures are not available for 1979. Information relating to the number of pupils in the county of Lancashire is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the comparative productivity of salaried and contractual dentists; and what information she has on the costs of treatments in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney: The monitoring of the cost effectiveness and productivity of salaried dentists is the managerial responsibility of those family health services authorities concerned. Data held centrally are not sufficiently detailed to permit a treatment-by-treatment comparison between general dental practitioners and salaried dentists.

Health Service, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration was given to the appointment of the chairman and non-executive directors of Doncaster healthcare trust to appointing a greater proportion of persons living within Doncaster or south Yorkshire.

Dr. Mawhinney: The area where chairmen and non-executive directors live is a factor in appointing chairmen and non-executive directors of NHS trusts. Those appointed are expected to live or work in the area served by the trust, or to have connections with it.

Computers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set up a public inquiry into the investment in computers by the national health service since 1986, into their appropriateness and robustness, and into whether the contracts were issued in accordance with standing orders.

Mr. Sackville: No. The National Audit Office published a report of its inquiry into the management of national health service computer projects in 1990 and we accepted its recommendations. The Audit Commission plans a further inquiry in 1994. It is for the local general manager to ensure, and auditors to be satisfied, that staff letting contracts comply with standing orders.

Guidelines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue revised guidelines as to the matters with which health authorities should deal in public.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no current plans to do so.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent guidance she has issued to health authorities on purchasing.

Mr. Sackville: The NHS management executive's priorities and planning guidance for 1993-94 issued in July 1992 (EL(92)47), a copy of which is available in the Library, required regions to take a range of actions to develop the purchasing role of health authorities. Over the last two years the NHS management executive has also issued good practice guidance on several purchasing and contracting issues.

Health Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis annual remuneration for NHS chairmen and non-executive directors was calculated; and what is the minimum time each would be expected to contribute to their duties each month.

Dr. Mawhinney: The remuneration of health authority and trust chairmen is determined by the Secretary of State with the consent of the Treasury; the level of remuneration depends on a number of factors including the level of duties and responsibilities. Chairmen are expected to spend between two and a half and three and a half days per week on their duties, depending on the nature of the authority or trust. Non-executive members and directors are expected to spend two to three days per month on their duties.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what disciplinary action has been taken against (a) officers, (b) chairmen, (c) members and (d) non-executive directors in respect of the recent contractural problems in Wessex and the West Midlands regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Disciplinary action taken against officers is a matter for the regional health authorities concerned. Formal disciplinary procedures are not appropriate for chairmen, members or non-executive directors as they are not NHS employees.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to change the nature or extent of the current duties and responsibilities of (a) the Doncaster health authority and (b) the Doncaster family health services authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for Trent regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Michael Carlisle, the chairman of the authority, for details.

Food Supplements

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the proposals for the restriction on the sale of food supplements manufactured by Foresight.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food received comments from Foresight earlier this year on the Government's proposal for an EC framework directive on dietary supplements.

A proposal for a draft directive has not yet been made by the EC Commission.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will permit those hospital trusts approved in the most recent wave to alter the management structure submitted in the application before the trusts begin operating on 1 April 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service trusts are free to create their own management structures. Before 1 April 1993 third wave trusts may appoint staff and do anything reasonably necessary to prepare for their operational date.

Manchester Royal Infirmary

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will increase the funding of the Manchester royal infirmary for renal services.

Mr. Sackville: Renal services at Manchester royal infirmary are funded by North Western regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bruce Martin, the chairman of the authority, for details.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients (a) at Manchester royal infirmary, (b) in the North West regional health authority and (c) in England are currently on the waiting list for (i) renal disconnect systems and (ii) all renal treatment.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting time information by individual procedure is not collected centrally. However, patients who are suffering from end stage renal failure are not placed on waiting lists but are treated immediately by means of haemo-dialysis or kidney transplant.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients at the Manchester royal infirmary have been treated under (a) conventional and (b) renal disconnect systems in each of the past three years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not collected centrally. Manchester royal infirmary is part of the Central Manchester hospitals and community care NHS trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. K. Collis, chairman of the trust, for details.

Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the level of capital spending on hospital and community health services in net terms after deducting proceeds from land and property sales, in each year since 1974-75 (a) in cash terms, (b) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator and (c) adjusted using the relevant index of NHS prices;

(2) what was the level of (a) total NHS expenditure, (b) current expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (c) capital expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (d) expenditure on the family practitioner services, (e) expenditure on centrally funded NHS services and (f) expenditure on personal social services, in each year since 1974-75, (i) in cash terms, (ii) adjusted using the relevant pay and prices index and (iii) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 November 1992]: The information requested is given in the table. In addition, a net increase in 1993-94 of £1·066 million for the national health service as a whole was announced in the "Autumn Statement"—a real increase of 1 per cent. over 1992-93.

Figures in column B do not reflect these transfers and are therefore not comparable with those for later years.

(c) CHMS figures only available from 1987-88 onwards. There is no pay and price index for the CHMS.

(d) 1991-92 figures are provisional and 1992-93 figures are estimated outturn.

Hospital Patients (Segregation)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines his Department has issued to hospitals about segregating elderly patients from other patients.

Mr. Yeo: There is no policy of segregation for acute medical treatment; but some health problems in elderly people are best treated by specialist teams, which will usually be concentrated in one part of a hospital designed to cater for the special needs of elderly people. Decisions about the most appropriate type and place of treatment are for local clinical judgment. The Department has no proposals to issue guidelines.

NHS Pensions

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will amend the NHS pension scheme to allow unmarried members of the scheme to nominate a person to receive the benefit of the scheme after their death.

Dr. Mawhinney: The scheme already provides entitlement to lump sum death benefit to be paid to the estate of an unmarried member. We are reviewing the provisions of the scheme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Mates: I refer the hon. Member to a reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary State, Office of Public Service and Science on 17 November, Official Report, column 104.

Announcements about privatisation or contractorisation of Northern Ireland agencies will normally be made as each agency's periodic review of its framework document is completed.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set up an inquiry into assistance by RUC officers to the South African agents, du Randt and Flores.

Mr. Mates: No, because I am advised that there is no substance to the allegations.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Mates: Private detectives have been used as follows:

Government Loans Fund

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the outstanding amounts from the Government Loans Fund for each of the Northern Ireland district councils and other Northern Ireland public bodies.

Mr. Mates: The Government Loans Fund was abolished by articles 7 to 15 of the Financial Provisions (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 and its functions were transferred to the Consolidated Fund for Northern Ireland. British Subjects

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what compensation is available to British subjects deprived of their livelihood and detained without charge or trial in a foreign country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: British nationals in these circumstances should seek compensation through the courts of the country concerned.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further steps he intends to take to secure the release of Mr. Allan Nicklin from the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's ambassador in Riyadh is urging the Saudi Arabian authorities to speed up the process of Mr. Nicklin's departure from Saudi Arabia. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pressed the case with the Saudi Arabian ambassador in London on 17 November 1992.

Iranian Arms Procurement

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the resumption of activities in connection with Iranian arms procurement at 4 Victoria street; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not given approval for the Iranian military procurement offices to be reopened in Britain by the Iranian Government. Any evidence of wrongdoing would be urgently investigated and, if appropriate, would be a matter for the courts.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the United Nations-sponsored Cyprus peace talks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The set of ideas produced by the United Nations Secretary-General, and endorsed by the Security Council as the basis for a settlement, was worked through in full in direct talks from 28 October to 11 November. There are significant areas of common ground. Important differences remain, with some Turkish Cypriot positions incompatible with the ideas. We welcome the agreement to resume talks in early March and will continue to play a full part in encouraging progress.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet President Vassiliou of Cyprus to discuss the British Government's response to the collapse of United Nations-sponsored Cyprus peace talks in New York; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no current plans to meet President Vassiliou, but we remain in regular contact with him and all parties to the dispute. The Cyprus talks, chaired by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, have not collapsed: the parties have agreed to resume the talks in March next year.

Pet Animals

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom ratification and implementation of the Council of Europe convention on pet animals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

While existing domestic legislation already fulfils some of the requirements of the Convention, some legislative changes would be required before the United Kingdom could be a party to it. We are currently considering the changes which would be required.

DEFENCE

Submarine Reactor Cores

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and location of used nuclear submarine reactor cores held by his Department.

Mr. Aitken: Currently some 37 nuclear submarine used reactor cores are stored at BNFL Sellafield. In addition, one nuclear submarine used reactor core is held at each of the following locations: Rosyth royal dockyard, Devonport royal dockyard, and the naval reactor test establishment Dounreay.

A91 Project Definition Study

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer by the Minister of State for Defence Procurement of 6 November, Official Report, column 530, when the A91 project definition study was commissioned; who is carrying out the study; and what is the cost of the study.

Mr. Aitken: The contract for the A91 project definition study was awarded to NNC Ltd. on 24 August 1992. The costs associated with this contract are commercially confidential.

Heavy Duty Vehicles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many truck cargo heavy duty vehicles have now been delivered to his Department.

Mr. Aitken: Eight.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the volumes of (a) low-level waste, (b) intermediate-level waste and (c) high-level waste stored at (i) AWE Aldermaston, (ii) AWE Burghfield and (iii) AWE Cardiff for each year since 1979.

Mr. Aitken: The amounts stored for each year are set out in the table:

Volumes of low and intermediate-level waste stored at AWE sites

Volumes are in cubic metres

Year	AWE Aldermaston LLW	AWE Aldermaston ILW	AWE Burghfield LLW	AWE Cardiff LLW
1979	580	870	7	160
1980	720	370	5	80
1981	780	340	8	70
1982	1,060	860	2	90
1983	1,140	520	6	220
1984	1,160	800	3	140
1985	1,200	950	3	60
1986	1,670	1,140	3	210
1987	1,340	1,380	0·3	170
1988	2,630	1,570	0·7	20
1989	2,100	1,780	0·7	20
1990	1,680	1,940	1	10
1991	1,800	2,100	1	20
1992	2,210	2,200	1	50

Notes:

1. The apparent change in AWE(A) LLW holdings between 1987 and 1988 is mainly due to revised volume accounting arrangements. Measurement by gross volume of ISO containers was introduced at this time.
2. Figures stated are holdings in December for each of the years quoted, actual material held fluctuates during the course of the year.
3. ILW has been accumulating each year since 1983, following suspension of sea dumping.
4. Figures for AWE(A) and AWE(C) are rounded to the nearest $10m^3$.

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the plutonium processing laboratories in A90 are expected to be declared operational.

Mr. Aitken: The plutonium processing facilities in A90 are scheduled to become operational in time to meet the needs of the Trident programme.

Ancillary Services

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to transfer ancillary services that do not have an offensive or defensive function to the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence, in common with other Government Departments, is testing the quality and value for money of its own in-house services by exposing them to competition from the private sector. We plan, over the next four years, to expose to competition activities that currently cost us £1·2 billion a year. Where the private sector can offer better quality and value for money, the work will be transferred.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date it was first brought to his attention that Matrix Churchill goods were being used for military purposes in Iraq.

Mr. Rifkind: I first became aware in September this year that Matrix Churchill goods might have been used for military purposes in Iraq.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Aitken: All my Department's agencies are periodically reviewed as set out in the procedure described by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science on 17 November, Official Report, column 104.

Army Pay and Personnel Unit

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian and military personnel are at present employed in the Army pay and personnel unit.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 389 military and 1,770 civilian personnel are at present employed in the Army's pay and personnel process.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans for the relocation and the future size and composition of the Army pay and personnel unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A study examining the most efficient and cost-effective organisation for the Army's personnel function, and recommending a site for the organisation, has just been completed. I hope to be able to announce our proposals and commence consultation with the trade unions and other interested parties shortly.

Armaments

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the transportation of armaments by rail in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In Scotland, as in any part of the United Kingdom, the Department uses the most convenient and cost-effective methods of transporting armaments. Providing these criteria can be met, movement by rail is, however, the preferred method. All the necessary safety precautions are taken and the relevant safety regulations strictly adhered to, whatever the method of transport.

"Options for Change"

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review is being undertaken of the objectives contained within "Options for Change" in the light of the deployment in Bosnia and the possibility of further deployment of British troops.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's plans for force restructuring were developed in the recognition that instabilities and risks to our security would continue to exist in Europe and elsewhere. Nothing in recent events, including the commitment of troops to Bosnia, has invalidated those plans.

Portland Naval Base

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 802, whether he has sought the views of other NATO countries concerning the closure of the Portland naval base; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The naval authorities of nations that regularly undertake operational sea training—OST—at Portland have been advised of its proposed transfer to Devonport and have indicated that this would not be a factor in deciding whether they wished to continue participating in OST. We expect to provide the same standard of service to these foreign navies at Devonport.

House Purchase Scheme

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the new house purchase savings scheme for service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am pleased to announce arrangements for the introduction of the service home savings scheme have been completed. It will come into operation on 1 December 1992. The scheme is open to service personnel who have served for three years and who do not already own a home. If they save regularly for at least five years, with monthly contributions from £50 to £200, then when they buy a home, my Department will give them £1 for every £3 they have saved, including interest earned on their savings.

Four financial institutions have been selected to operate the scheme, and will offer competitive rates on the savings deposited with them. They are:

Bank of Scotland
Gartmore Money Management
Norwich and Peterborough Building Society
Skipton Building Society

I am placing in the Library of the House copies of the explanatory brochure on the scheme which is being sent to all service personnel.

The introduction of this new scheme represents a significant step forward in improving the opportunities for service personnel to become home owners.

Hydrographic Office

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the performance of the Hydrographic Office in its second year of operation as a defence support agency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the Hydrographic Office defence support agency's annual report and accounts for the year 1991-92.

As the chief executive, Rear Admiral Myres, notes in his foreword, the performance targets set for 1991-92 were not insignificant, and the annual report shows that the Hydrographic Office has met or exceeded all its targets. This has been achieved in a difficult year for the Ministry as a whole, faced with the continuing need to secure economies in defence spending and the chief executive and his staff are to be congratulated.

TRANSPORT

Overloaded Coaches

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many coaches have been found to be seriously overloaded after arrival at Channel ports from mainland Europe during the last year in which statistics are available.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Coach traffic from mainland Europe is not specifically targeted for weighing at ports of entry. But of the 506 coaches weighed by the Vehicle Inspectorate at the Department's weighbridge site on the A2 near Dover during the year ending 31 October 1992, the vast majority will have entered the United Kingdom from mainland Europe. Eighty-three coaches—some 16 per cent. of those weighed—were found to be seriously overloaded and were immediately prohibited from continuing their journeys.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he will ensure that a unified network of rail services is maintained for passengers and freight after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: The Government proposals are set out in "New Opportunities for the Railways", Cm 2012. Railtrack will provide and control the track network. Train services will be provided by private sector operators, including franchisees meeting standards set by a new franchising authority.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to regulate rail fare rises and keep them within inflation after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: Where franchised rail services enjoy significant market power, fares will be controlled through the franchise contracts. In addition, the regulator will be able to control fares on non-franchised services to protect abuse of monopoly power. Detailed arrangements will be decided later, taking account of the circumstances of individual services: the first franchises will not be let until 1994.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that tickets for rail services will continue to be acceptable across the network after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: We have given a clear commitment to preserve through-ticketing. It will be for operators to negotiate acceptance of each other's tickets, to the extent that the regulator does not decide to impose such a requirement.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will preserve railcards, travelcards, and discount and concessionary fares in his plans for the railway network after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: The offer of discounted ticketing arrangements will be a matter for the operator's judgment, as it is now for BR. In a competitive environment there will be every incentive for operators to seek to attract custom and maximise revenue by such measures. The regulator will have powers to intervene if necessary to ensure that benefits to passengers are maintained.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure rail services with through and connecting trains after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: We expect the involvement of the private sector to ensure a better response to passenger demand for connecting and through services. Railtrack, as the track authority, will be responsible for the overall planning and operation of the timetable, in close consultation with operators and with oversight by the regulator.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he will ensure continued comprehensive timetable and passenger information for the entire railway network after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: It will be in the commercial interests of operators to publicise their services and produce timetable information for passengers. If there is any doubt about the extent to which adequate information will be available, the rail regulator will have powers to impose appropriate requirements.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he will maintain customer involvement in changes and improvements to rail services after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: The Government are well aware of the benefits of the current arrangements and are clear that effective consumer representation needs to be maintained. I have discussed our privatisation proposals with the Central Transport Consultative Committee on a number of occasions and have taken note of its initial views. We intend to publish a document on consumer representation by the end of the year.

Rail Access

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he will make it his policy to increase access to stations, in the national railway network, for elderly and disabled persons.

Mr. Freeman: The day-to-day operation of the railways, including the provision of all facilities at stations, is currently the responsibility of British Rail. BR has a policy commitment to improve access and facilities for people with mobility problems wherever possible. All major stations have a range of appropriate facilities; BR also issues design guidance on making stations accessible and run extensive disability awareness training programmes for their staff. In addition, it has a special adviser on disability who chairs an advisory group which looks at all proposals for station developments.

Rail Services (Rural Areas)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to preserve and enhance rail services to rural areas.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is under an obligation to provide services which are comparable generally with those provided in 1988. There is no reason why privatisation of the railways should result in service reductions or closures. Subsidy is not dependent on public ownership of the railways and we have made it clear that we intend to provide subsidy where it is required to maintain socially necessary services.

A24

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost of converting the A24 to dual carriageway from the Worthing border to the Offington roundabout.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The A24 is the responsibility of West Sussex county council. The Department is not aware of any plans to widen the section between Findon and Offington corner. However, as part of its work in relation to the A27 Worthing-Lancing improvement, the Department has estimated that the cost of dualling this section of the A24 would be between £7·5 million, and £12·3 million, depending on the standard adopted. These costs are at fourth-quarter 1990 prices.

Market Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends to take to ensure that any market testing by his Department measures like with like and that there is a level playing field for such exercises.

Mr. Norris: The White Paper "Competing for Quality", Cm 1730, introduced the concept of the in-house bid to market-testing. The Department is conducting extensive consultations to establish a sound framework within which market-testing exercises will be carried out. It is also ensuring that the experiences of other Departments inform the deliberations. Central Departments are also advising on common issues. Evaluation of bids when received will be carried out with the assistance of the Department's accountancy adviser. Attention to comparing like with like and ensuring a level playing field are central to the Department's procedures.

Merchant Seamen

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, during the United Kingdom European presidency, he will seek changes in EC regulations to ensure that most United Kingdom and European merchant seamen serving on vessels under flags of convenience will not be discriminated against with regard to social security and health arrangements.

Mr. Norris: Current EC regulations cover only those seamen serving on vessels operating under a flag of a member state. However, all British seamen working overseas outside the Community are entitled to make voluntary national insurance contributions, thereby preserving their rights to some benefits.

Networker Trains

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the quality of service of the new Networker trains currently being tested on the North Kent suburban lines.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has not received any representations about the quality of service of the new Networker trains which started coming into service at the beginning of October. The new trains are currently running during the off-peak period in addition to the timetabled trains to see how they perform in passenger service. Once the trains have completed, these trials they will be phased into peak services, probably from the end of November. All off-peak services should be operated by Networkers by May 1993 and the complete replacement of the trains should be complete by the end of 1995-96.

Petroleum

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the transport of petroleum by rail in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has received a letter from the hon. Member, and will respond shortly.

West Highland Railway Line

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with British Rail regarding proposals to end the carriage of petroleum supplies on the West Highland line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. This is a commercial matter for British Rail.

Strasbourg Air Services

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the single market will have on the ability of British airlines to provide services to and from Strasbourg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Existing Community rules allow British airlines to operate services to Strasbourg. These rules, however, contain limitations on the capacity which carriers are entitled to provide, and regulate the fares which can be charged. On 1 January 1993, the Community's single market in air transport takes effect. Capacity limitations will then be removed; and free pricing will be introduced, subject to safeguards against excessively high or predatory fares. The decision to operate services on particular routes remains a matter for the commercial judgment of the airlines.

Roads (Investment)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what rate of return on investment is achieved on (a) local safety schemes and (b) motorway widening schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 13 November 1992]: Returns provided by local authorities indicate that the sums earmarked for local safety schemes in the transport supplementary grant settlement for 1991-92 produced an average first year rate of return of 76 per cent., and over the first three years an average rate of return of 213 per cent.

Motorway widening schemes are appraised using the COBA and QUADRO computer programs. For those programmed motorway widening schemes that have reached the stage of having a validated cost-benefit assessment based on current traffic forecasts, the average ratio between the discounted benefits and the discounted costs is 3 : 1.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the receipts of local councils from council house sales they have been allowed to spend.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authorities have been allowed to spend 25 per cent. of their receipts from council house sales and 50 per cent. of most other receipts. Under regulations which came into force on 13 November 1992, local authorities may spend in full the capital receipts obtained between that date and 31 December 1993 from nearly all sales of council houses and other assets.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will allow local authorities to spend more of their council house receipts.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 November 1992]: Under regulations which came into force on 13 November 1992, local authorities may spend in full the capital receipts obtained between that date and 31 December 1993 from nearly all sales of council houses and other assets.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contributions were made by (a) his Department and (b) consultants to his Department, to the international radioactive waste management advisory committee of the International Atomic Energy Agency special meeting held in Vienna in October.

Mr. Maclean: The second meeting of the international radioactive waste management advisory committee sub-group on principles and criteria for radioactive waste disposal, which met in Vienna from 27 to 29 October 1992, was attended by an inspector from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution who participated fully in the discussions which took place.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Howard: None of the agencies for which I am responsible is currently a candidate for privatisation or contractorisation. These are, however, issues that are considered as part of each agency's three-year review; where appropriate, an announcement would be made.

Competitive Tendering

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals he has to amend the Local Government (Direct Labour Organisations) (Competition) Regulations 1989, S.I., 1989, No. 1588;

(2) if he will make it his policy to apply regulation 6 of the Local Government (Direct Labour Organisations) (Competition) Regulations 1989, S.I., 1989 No. 1588, on compulsory competitive tendering, to all works of maintenance irrespective of their value.

Mr. Redwood: All construction and maintenance work, other than a limited range of highways work, carried out by local authorities on their own account, is subject to the competitive tendering provisions of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 and the regulations made thereunder. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has consulted on proposals to subject the full range of highways work to these provisions, and the responses are being considered. We have no plans to amend the regulations in respect of the limited competition-free allowances provided for work carried out by authorities for other public bodies.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Howard: None.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 18 November 1992]: None.

Water

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to bring forward proposals for statutory annual reports and audits on water resources management in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: No. The present arrangements are adequate. They require the National Rivers Authority, among other things, to prepare annual reports on its activities, including its duty to conserve, and secure the proper use of, water resources; and to publish information from which assessments can be made of the actual and prospective demand for water and of actual and prospective water resources.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to amend the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to require all planning applications affecting sites of special scientific interest to receive direct ministerial approval.

Mr. Maclean: No. Department of the Environment circular 1/92 states that the Secretary of State will normally call in planning applications which are likely to affect SSSIs of international importance and of recognised national importance. Guidance to local authorities and others on how the conservation of our natural heritage is to be reflected in land use planning and development control is set out in circular 27/87. The guidance will be updated in a planning policy guidance note, which will be published shortly.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake further investigation on the type and nature of contamination on all sites which are included on his departmental register of contaminated land.

Mr. Maclean: My Department does not keep such a register. We are considering the responses to our proposals for the compilation by local authorities of registers of land which may be contaminated. Authorities have a duty to investigate possible contamination where they consider that this may constitute a nuisance, and to ensure that action is taken where necessary.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies have been undertaken into atmospheric effects of methyl bromide.

Mr. Maclean: The best current understanding of the effects of methyl bromide was recently summarised and assessed by the methyl bromide science panel at the request of the United Nations Environment Programme.

Pit Closures

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account has been taken of the employment effect of pit closures in calculating standard spending assessments.

Mr. Robin Squire: Proposals for 1993-94 standard spending assessments will be announced shortly as part of the provisional revenue support grant settlement.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 974, concerning Lord Walker, if he will give details as to the terms, including salary, on which Lord Walker has been appointed chairman-designate of the urban regeneration agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Lord Walker will be chairman of the urban regeneration agency when it is established. His current role as chairman-designate does not constitute a formal appointment. He will receive no remuneration as chairman-designate or as chairman.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the expenditure levels for reclamation projects in opencast mining sites for each year since 1980; and what projection for such costs are available for the next (a) 10 years and (b) 50 years.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally.

Unemployment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of increased costs to local authorities resulting from increased unemployment levels, when calculating standard spending assessments.

Mr. Robin Squire: Proposals for standard spending assessments for 1993-94 will be announced shortly as part of the provisional revenue support grant settlement.

Portland Naval Base

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funding will be made available to (a) Dorset county council and (b) Weymouth borough council as a result of the closure of Portland naval base; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to provide additional funding on this account through the revenue support grant settlement for 1993-94.

Pollution Control

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will determine the appeals by National Power and PowerGen under section 22(5) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for parts of their applications for integrated pollution control authorisation to be excluded from the public register on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Howard: I have today dismissed the appeal by PowerGen which related to forecast schedules of emission for 1991. In view of what I conclude to be the significance of the information to the process of application and authorisation and the consequent importance of its being available to the public, and my conclusions on the likelihood and extent of prejudice, I consider that the inclusion of the information in the register would not have been prejudicial to an unreasonable degree to the commercial interests of the appellant.

I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales have today jointly determined to allow National Power's appeal, which relates to different information. We are satisfied that the information is not directly relevant to determination of the applications for authorisation themselves or to any of the conditions that are likely to be imposed in the authorisations and is not necessary to enable the public to comment effectively on the applications. The information was provided in excess of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's normal requirements and is not of the type intended by the legislation to be made available to the public. In view of the lack of relevance for the purposes of integrated pollution control, we consider that any prejudice to the company's commercial interests would be unreasonable in the circumstances.

The appeals were the first of their kind under the new system and raised complex issues which required full and careful consideration. Forecast schedules of emission have been supplied by PowerGen for 1992 and are the subject of a separate appeal. Similar information in respect of 1993 will be required to be supplied to HMIP shortly by both PowerGen and National Power. It is to be hoped that any further issue of confidentiality will be resolved as soon as possible, and that determination of all the companies' applications for authorisation will then proceed without undue delay.

Orimulsion

Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications he has received for authorisation to burn orimulsion; for what amounts in tonnes; and at which power stations.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 10 November 1992]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has received four applications to burn orimulsion.

The applicants state that the amounts of orimulsion which each station can burn at maximum load will be as follows:

Padiham Power Station, Lancashire (National Power) approximately 43 tonnes per hour; Pembroke Power Station, Dyfed (National Power) approximately 700 tonnes per hour; Ince "B" Power Station, Cheshire (PowerGen) approximately 165 tonnes per hour and Richborough Power Station, Kent (PowerGen) approximately 126 tonnes per hour.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with local authorities about the report by the Institute of Local Government on the effects on costs and services of local government in the metropolitan areas of England following the abolition of the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Squire [holding answer 17 November 1992]: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such discussions.

Housing, Pendle

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give the number of households on the waiting list of Pendle borough council for each year since 1982;

(2) what percentage of (a) the local authority, (b) housing associations, (c) the private sector and (d) the total housing stock in Pendle was assessed as requiring major expenditure to bring it up to standard, in each year since 1982.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report in their annual housing investment programme—HIP—returns the number of dwellings in their own stock that are unfit, not unfit but in need of renovation, and those designated under the housing defects legislation and not yet reinstated, along with estimates of those owned by housing associations and in the private sector.

Since 1986, local authorities also report the number of households on their council housing waiting lists.

The information reported by Pendle is as follows:

	Percentage of housing stock requiring capital expenditure
	LA[1 2]	HA	Private[3]	Total[1 2 3]	Number of households on waiting list
1982	26	0	40	37	n/a
1983	24	0	38	35	n/a
1984	23	0	37	34	n/a
1985	34	11	37	37	n/a

[1] Pendle BC has provided amended local authority and total figures for 1991 since the HIP1 returns were finalised.

[2] The information collected for local authority dwellings that were not unfit but in need of renovation in 1991 and 1992 relates to all dwellings requiring capital expenditure whereas, prior to 1991, a lower limit of £3,000 was imposed.

[3] The information collected for private sector dwellings that were not unfit but in need of renovation in 1991 and 1992 relates only to dwellings whose owners were likely to be eligible for discretionary renovation grants.

[4] In 1990 Pendle borough council relaxed the conditions of entry to its waiting list for council housing.

Lleyn Peninsula

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will commission an independent assessment of the possible environmental damage from exploration for fossil fuels off the Lleyn peninsula.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 November 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

I am responding to this question in view of my ministerial responsibilities for oil and gas exploration licensing. It is the responsibility of the company holding the petroleum production licence to commission an environmental impact assessment if asked to do so in the special conditions attached to the licence. Hamilton Oil Company was awarded the two blocks north-west of the Lleyn peninsula in the 12th round of offshore oil and gas licensing. It will be required to produce such an assessment before development takes place on these blocks. The assessment will be copied to statutory bodies, such as the Joint Nature Conservancy Committee, water authorities and mineral planning authorities, which will advise if the planned development is likely to have an adverse effect on the environment.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines have been issued to local authorities concerning the treatment of attendance allowance income in respect of means-tested support services.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

We are in the process of issuing guidance to local authorities on the new charging rules from next April for people in residential accommodation under local authority arrangements. The guidance explains that local authorities should disregard attendance allowances and the care component of disability living allowance where it is paid to temporary residents.

We will be issuing guidance later about the treatment of attendance allowance and the care component of disability living allowance in charging for domiciliary and day care services.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the capital allocations for personal social services issued to each local authority in England for each year since 1981-82 and the annual capital guidelines for personal social services for the same years, at current and constant prices.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 10 November 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

Table 1 gives details of personal social services capital allocations by local authority from 1987-88, at current and constant prices. From 1990-91 the allocations include supplementary credit approvals and the secure accommodation for children grant, where applicable. Prior to 1990-91, supplementary credit approvals were not available. Information about capital allocations from 1981-82 to 1986-87 and about allocations for secure accommodation for children prior to 1990-91 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Table 2 gives details of annual capital guideline allocations, from their introduction in 1990-91, at current and constant prices.

Medical Research

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much Government aid has been given since 1979 for research into (a) the causes and (b) potential cures of (i) cancer and (ii) AIDS.

Mr. Robert Jackson [holding answer 18 November 1992]: The main Government agency for the funding of medical research is the Medical Research Council. Between 1979-80 and 1991-92, MRC total expenditure on research specifically related to cancer was £142 million. The MRC also supports research which is more general in its application but is also likely to be relevant to cancer; it estimates that it spent £73 million on such research in 1991-92. Information is not collected centrally on other Government-funded expenditure on cancer research undertaken by university departments and medical schools, health departments or health authorities.

Information on Government support for AIDS research has been collected since 1986-87. Over the period 1986-87 to 1992-93 an estimated £105 million has been devoted by Government to AIDS research. This figure excludes expenditure by university departments and medical schools on research funded by the Government through the Universities Funding Council.

It is not possible separately to identify research expenditure on the causes and cures of cancer or AIDS.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will arrange for concessionary television licences to be available to households consisting of registered blind adults; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: A television licence is not required where broadcast television signals are received in sound only through a specially adapted monitor such as that supplied by the Royal National Institute for the Blind. A reduction of £1·25 on the cost of a television licence was instituted in 1971 when radio licences were abolished and is available to all registered blind people not resident in a public or charitable institution or in a school.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tir Cymen

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to extend the Tir Cymen scheme to the whole of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Tir Cymen is the countryside stewardship scheme in Wales. It has been introduced for a period of five years as an experimental project in three areas because it is the first environmental incentive scheme for all farmed landscapes and habitats in a large area and it is essential to evaluate the administrative, financial and monitoring systems adopted. The extension of the scheme will depend on the outcome of that evaluation and the resources then available.

Household Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales that plan to (a) fulfil and (b) exceed Government targets for local authority recycling of 25 per cent. of all household waste by the year 2000.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Departmental Printing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the value of his Department's total annual expenditure on printing for each of the past 10 financial years; what tendering procedure has been followed; and if it has been changed since 1982-83.

Mr. David Hunt: Annual expenditure on printing costs for the past five financial years is as follows:

Year	£(000's)
1987-88	378
1988-89	458
1989-90	560
1990-91	543
1991-92	489

Figures for earlier years are not available.

Prior to September 1991 the majority of the Department's printing requirements were met under standing arrangements with HMSO. Purchasing since that date has been conducted entirely on the basis of competitive tendering for individual tasks.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the population-based formula for public expenditure for Wales, referred to in his press notice of 12 November, as it applied for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: The population-based formula for public expenditure which applied until 1992-93 provided adjustments in the Welsh block provision equal to 5·88 per cent. of the survey changes agreed for comparable programmes in England. For 1993-94 the formula has been updated to 6·02 per cent. to take account of the latest estimated population relativity between the two countries.

PRIME MINISTER

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek to place the issue of Kashmir on the agenda of the next Commonwealth conference to take place during 1993 in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government believe the Kashmir dispute can be resolved only by peaceful agreement between India and Pakistan. We have offered to help to achieve a lasting settlement, if both sides wish us to do so.

Iraq

10. Mr. Darling: To ask the Prime Minister when he became aware that Bank of Credit and Commerce International accounts were being used to facilitate arms trading with Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 November 1992]: I have no such knowledge.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his autumn statement of 12 November, what are the percentage figures for expenditure under the population-related formula on Wales and Northern Ireland comparable to the 10·66 per cent. specified for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The comparable figure for Wales, reflecting the population figures in the 1991 census, is 6·02 per cent. For Northern Ireland it is 2·87 per cent.

Iraq

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the reasons for the dropping by Customs and Excise of their prosecution at Dover magistrates court in July against Contractors 600 for illegal exportation to Iraq of lathes supplied by the Colchester Lathe Company; what payments of fines were made by the company; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The proceedings referred to were in respect of the export of castings without the requisite licence. The alleged offence was under section 68(1) of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 which does not allege fraudulent intent.

Proceedings in this case were stayed following an agreement by the commissioners in the exercise of their authority under section 152 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 to compound proceedings on payment of £75,000.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the extent of the change of the number of criminal cases listed for magistrates courts in England and Wales during the current year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not available. I understand that "Home Office Criminal Statistics" for 1991, the latest year available, are expected to be published within the next few months.

Lord Justice Scott

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those cases, or other tribunals, over which Lord Justice Scott is currently presiding or participating; and what cases are currently listed in which he is due to preside or participate.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Lord Justice Scott was sitting as a member of a three-judge Court of Appeal, hearing appeals in the ordinary course of the court's business which might concern a wide variety of subject matters. He is now devoting all of his time to the inquiry.

It is impossible to give any firm indication of the cases listed before the court of which he would have been a member, since cases are only provisionally listed until the availability of judges is known. It is often necessary to make changes at short notice to such lists.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those agencies in the Lord Chancellor's Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 17 November, Official Report, column 104, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Services and Science to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) who asked what plans my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster had to review the status of agencies set up as part of the Government's next steps programme; and whether a statement would be made. The procedures outlined in that answer will apply to the Public Record Office and the Land Registry, the agencies for which the Lord Chancellor is responsible. An announcement about the future status of each agency will be made at the appropriate time.

Trial Delays

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average length of time between committal and trial at Crown courts (a) for each of the last five years and (b) for the latest date available.

1990 — 12·1 weeks
1991 — 12·6 weeks
1992 (January to September) — 13·6 weeks

Miss Lestor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much has been paid by the Legal Aid Board and its predecessor to accountants in each year since 1987 (a) in total and (b) in respect of matrimonial legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board does not specifically maintain statistics on the amounts it pays in respect of accountants' fees. It does, however, publish the amount paid on disbursements, of which accountants' fees are an element, in its annual reports. In each year between 1987-88 and 1991-92, the following amounts were paid by the Legal Aid Board in respect of disbursements, in total and in matrimonial cases:

1989	259,157
1990	297,555

It is not possible to distinguish between civil legal aid certificates which cover the whole of the proceedings and those which cover only part of the case.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the sum of money recovered in each year since 1987 by the Legal Aid Board and its predecessor by way of contributions towards legal aid by the assisted persons (a) in total, (b) for matrimonial aid and (c) for personal injuries.

(2) how much money has been paid out by the Legal Aid Board and its predecessor in each year since 1987 in respect of experts' fees in personal injuries cases where the plaintiff was legally aided.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board does not maintain information specifically on the amounts it pays in respect of experts' fees. It does, however, publish the amounts paid on disbursements, of which experts' fees and court fees form a substantial element, in its annual reports. The information provided by the board in its annual reports is broken down into matrimonial, non-matrimonial and criminal magistrates cases only. The amount paid out in respect of personal injury cases is not shown separately but is included in the figures for non-matrimonial cases. The table sets out the amounts paid in disbursements by the board during the past five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The independent appellate authority received an explanatory statement in the case of Mr. Abid Ali in relation to his settlement application on 23 June 1989 and another concerning his visit visa appeal on 2 July 1992. The appeals were heard together at Leeds on 16 November 1992; the visit visa appeal was withdrawn at the hearing and the adjudicator reserved judgment in the settlement appeal.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the Government's summary of conclusions to the wages council consultations in 1988.

Mr. McLoughlin: There were 394 responses to the consultation document. Of these, 80 favoured abolition, 308 wanted the councils to be retained and six were inconclusive. The replies from employer organisations with seats on the councils showed a marked change of view since the 1985 consultations, when the majority wanted the system retained. Replies from employer bodies represented on the six largest councils, which embraced 94 per cent. of the workers covered by the system, showed that a majority wanted the councils abolished.

Trade Union Commissioner

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the cost to public funds of setting up the office of the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members; and what has been the cost of running the office in each year since its establishment.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions the current director of field operations of the Health and Safety Executive has inspected a factory; and what are his managerial qualifications for his post.

Mr. McLoughlin: The director of field operations—DFO—does not, as a matter of policy, carry out inspections at factories or other premises for which the Health and Safety Executive—HSE—is the enforcing authority.

The DFO has overall management responsibility for more than 1,900 staff covering a wide range of duties in the field operations division. Inspection of factories is but one aspect of the work of the factory inspectorate and is undertaken by factory inspectors based in each of HSE's 20 area offices.

The current DFO has extensive managerial experience with HSE and has taken part in management and development training programmes within and external to the civil service.

Over-50s

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training opportunities are available to those over 50 years of age who find themselves out of work.

Mr. McLoughlin: All the Government's employment and training measures are open to those over 50 years of age who satisfy the relevant entry conditions, including length of unemployment where appropriate.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps she is taking to maintain employment prospects for those over 50 years of age.

Mr. McLoughlin: We are keen to improve employment prospects for people of all ages and believe that discrimination on the grounds of age is wasteful and shortsighted. We are encouraging employers to abandon arbitrary age limits in recruitment and to adopt personnel policies which treat everyone on their merits. Employers should be making more effective use of the skills and experience of people over 50. I am confident that the advisory group on older workers, whose membership I shall announce shortly, will help change employers' attitudes towards this age group.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of full-time employees have worked for their current employer for less than two years, in each standard planning region.

Mr. McLoughlin: The spring 1992 labour force survey shows that the proportions of full-time employees who had worked for their current employer for less than two years in each region were as follows:

	Percentage
South-East	24·9
East Anglia	24·5
South-West	24·9
West Midlands	22·6
East Midlands	21·3
Yorks and Humberside	24·7
North-West	22·0
Northern	23·7
Wales	25·2
Scotland	24·0
Northern Ireland	20·8

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of employees currently working part-time in the United Kingdom have worked with their present employer for less than five years, in each standard planning region.

Mr. McLoughlin: The spring 1992 labour force survey shows that the proportions of part-time employees who had worked for their current employer for less than five years in each region, were as follows.

	Percentage
South-East	66·6
East Anglia	64·1
South-West	65·4
West Midlands	63·1
East Midlands	63·3
Yorks and Humberside	66·2
North-West	61·5
Northern	62·6
Wales	63·8
Scotland	63·3
Northern Ireland	54·6

Wages Councils

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will place in the Library a copy of the research commissioned by her Department on the effect of abolition of wages councils on employment prospects for women.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department has commissioned several studies on the general economic effects of the wages councils. They suggest that the abolition of wages councils should improve employment prospects in the wages council industries, where the majority of workers are women. However, the studies do not focus exclusively on the prospects for women.

Pesticides

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action is to be taken against the pesticides contractor involved in case No. C132/91 investigated by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive—HSE—considers that there was insufficient evidence to prove that the contractor involved in case number C.132/91 investigated by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration—PCA—was in breach of any health and safety legislation. The PCA found that HSE had acted correctly in its assessment of the work of the contractor.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action she intends to take following the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration's second report 1992-93 in case No. C132/91 involving Mrs. Bettina Jonic Calder.

Mr. McLoughlin: Following the report by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration into Mrs. Calder's complaint, the Health and Safety Executive has introduced procedural changes relating to its dealings with members of the public and to the way it handles complaints which are received. The HSE considers that no further action is required.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the case of Mrs. Bettina Jonic Calder, Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration reference No. C132/91, will be included in the annual record of pesticides incidents investigated by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: The pesticide incident involving Mrs. Bettina Jonic Calder was investigated by the Health and Safety Executive in 1989 and details were recorded in the HSE's report "Pesticides Incidents Investigated in 1989/90" published in July 1990.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will review the role and operations of the pesticide incidents appraisal panel of the Health and Safety Executive following the finding in case No. C132/91 by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Mr. McLoughlin: The role and operation of the pesticides incidents appraisal panel were not investigated by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and his report made no call for their review. However, certain aspects of the work of the panel are currently under review, both in response to concern subsequently raised by the complainant and independently of her case.

Skills Training Agency (Properties)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many properties belonging to the former Skills Training Agency or skillcentres have been sold off.

Mr. McLoughlin: The former Skills Training Agency occupied 56 properties. The following 33 properties were transferred to Astra Training Services Ltd. in May 1990:

Barking
Basildon
Bellshill
Billingham
Birmingham
Bradford
Bristol

Reading	27 January 1992	Intersurgical Ltd.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much her Department has received under the clawback arrangements when Skills Training Agency or former skillcentre property has been sold off.

Mr. McLoughlin: Because no former Skills Training Agency or former skillcentre properties sold to private sector companies have been resold or redeveloped under circumstances which could trigger clawback payments, no receipts have been received under these arrangements.

Skillcentres

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the skillcentres which have closed since February 1990 giving the date of closure in each case; and how many of the original centres are still operating.

Mr. McLoughlin: Fifty-one skillcentres, of a total of 60, were sold when the Skills Training Agency was privatised in 1990. The remaining nine, at Letchworth, Portsmouth, Reading, Twickenham, Perivale, Chesterfield, Northampton, Southampton (Millbrook) and Chelmsford were closed by the Department on 31 July 1990. The operation of the sold centres is the responsibility of the purchasers and not of the Department, but I understand that some 43 continue to function.

Competitive Tendering

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what effect the changes to the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 contained in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill will have on local authority competitive tendering; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: One of the provisions in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, published on 5 November, is to extend the applications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to transfers of undertakings which are not "in the nature of a commercial venture".

These regulations provide for the transfer of employment rights when an undertaking is transferred to a new employer. There has been some misunderstanding about this amendment and its possible effects have been exaggerated in some press comments.

It has been suggested that the amendment extends the application of the regulations to the public sector and to compulsory competitive tendering for local authority services for the first time, and that people not covered in the past may now have a claim for retrospective compensation. The fact is that the regulations have always covered the public sector, including local authority services, as well as the private sector. Whether or not they apply in any individual case, however, depends on the facts of that case, and there are a number of tests to be applied.

For example, it needs to be shown that an undertaking or part of an undertaking has actually been transferred. This test has always applied and will continue to apply.

The Government are of the view that the regulations will not normally apply where a local authority contracts out in-house services, since such a transaction does not generally involve the transfer of an undertaking within the meaning of the regulations. The facts need to be considered in each case to see whether all the necessary criteria which determine whether the regulations apply have been satisfied. There will be no change in this position as a result of the amendments to the regulations proposed in the Bill.

The only relevant changes we are making in the Bill are as follows. It will no longer be necessary to show that the undertaking is in the nature of a commercial venture and property will not have to be transferred for there to be a transfer of an undertaking. These changes are required to bring the wording into line with the EC acquired rights directive and to clarify its interpretation.

The changes in the Bill do not imply that past cases should have been decided differently, because other criteria may have been relevant to those decisions; nor can it be assumed that future cases will be decided differently.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what strategic guidance she is giving to TECs for 1993-94; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Strategic guidance for 1993-94 on training, vocational education and enterprise will be issued today to all TECs. I am pleased that, this year, it is being published jointly with my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, emphasising a consistent, coherent strategy across government. The guidance builds on the six strategic priorities identified in earlier documents and sets out the key issues for TECs to address in their plans for the coming year. Copies of the guidance "The Strategy for Skills and Enterprise" have been placed in the Library.

Aid to Africa

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy for the additional funding granted to African countries during 1991-92 to total £30 million or more.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: The year 1991-92 was an exceptional year for major humanitarian needs; £60 million was added to the overseas aid vote to enable the Overseas Development Administration to respond to humanitarian needs, including famine in the Horn of Africa.

In 1991, we provided almost £54 million bilateral humanitarian assistance to the Horn of Africa. To date in 1992, we have already pledged, from existing programme resources, £112 million bilateral assistance—including balance of payments support, food and non-food assistance—to relieve famine in Africa. Of this, £61 million has been for the Horn of Africa.

Tanzania

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are used in determining the amount of aid given by the United Kingdom to Tanzania (a) bilaterally and (b) through the EC.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We take a number of factors into account when allocating bilateral aid to individual countries. These include the comparative poverty of the country concerned, and the effectiveness with which our aid can be used. We consider whether the country has adopted policies which will help to promote economic growth and social progress and to combat poverty. The quality of government in the country concerned is an integral part of our assessment.

The overall allocation of funds for the European development fund—EDF—is decided by the member states. The Commission then draws up national indicative programmes—NIPs—for individual countries based on the priorities set out in the Lomé convention. The overall allocation for Tanzania for EDF VII is 195 mecu for commitment over the period 1992 to 1997. Individual projects are then put to a management committee on which the Overseas Development Administration is represented. The same criteria are applied to the Commission's proposals as we apply to our own bilateral programme.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 November, Official Report, columns 553-54, if he will list the capital and technical co-operation projects in Tanzania supported by the EC; and the total cost of the projects in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Capital and technical co-operation projects funded by the EC in Tanzania since 1981 total 225·5 mecu—approximately £184 million at current exchange rates—and are listed in the table.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total cost to date in (a) historic costs and (b) 1992 prices of clean-up programmes and retrofitted technology installed at (i) Sellafield, (ii) Capenhurst, (iii) Springfields, (iv) Chapelcross, (v) Harwell, (vi) Dounreay and (vii) Risley, respectively, to protect the environment against radioactive and toxic contamination.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the operators of the sites concerned.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what subsidies have been made available to British Nuclear Fuels in each year since 1971, to cover the long-term treatment, storage and final disposal of high-level radioactive wastes from (a) foreign spent fuel imported under contracts signed up to December 1975 and (b) spent fuel sent to Sellafield by Nuclear Electric, Scottish Nuclear and their predecessor companies;

(2) what subsidy has been made available by Her Majesty's Government to British Nuclear Fuels for the disposal of low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes arising from contracts signed for reprocessing imported spent nuclear fuel (a) up to December 1975 and (b) since January 1976.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Engine Emissions Consortium

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what was the total cost to his Department of supporting the vehicle emissions consortium's programme;

(2) when the vehicle emissions consortium programme was concluded; what action he has taken as a result; and if he will place a copy of its reports in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: The total grant contribution from my Department in support of the United Kingdom engine emissions consortium's programme of research into petrol and diesel technologies amounted to £1,810,815. The last project in the programme concluded on 31 July 1992.

The 11 collaborators in the consortium are the main beneficiaries of the research conducted. They are obliged to take reasonable steps to exploit the results of the projects in which they participated and, if necessary, to co-operate with my Department in securing an alternative person or persons to undertake such exploitation. In addition, my Department will ensure that the results of the programme, once fully evaluated, will contribute to United Kingdom policy formation on vehicle emissions legislation.

Consortium members are preparing public presentations on the programme. I shall ensure that copies of these are placed in the Library of the House. Reports on the results of the programme provided to the Department by the member companies in the consortium contain commercially confidential information. It is open to the hon. Member to contact Perkins Technology Ltd. of Peterborough, the central co-ordinator of the programme, which will seek the agreement of the member companies to provide the hon. Member with more specific project information.

Albania

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department is providing British companies in creating the opportunities to trade with Albania.

Mr. Needham: The Albania trade section within my Department provides general information about the market and answers specific questions about market opportunities. In addition, the world aid section and the export intelligence service publicise the opportunities in Albania which arise from the activities of the multilateral funding agencies.

My officials also work closely with counterparts in the joint assistance unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to ensure that British companies are aware of opportunities under the know-how fund.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the meeting between Leicestershire county council on 3 November and the Minister for Industry regarding assisted area status for travel-to-work areas in the county.

Mr. Sainsbury: I found my meeting with Leicestershire county council interesting and useful. The points raised at the meeting will be carefully considered in the review of the assisted areas map.

Piper Alpha

Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the condition of the site of the Piper Alpha and of the removal of hazardous or toxic materials which could affect those engaged in maritime activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Conditions attached to the Piper Alpha abandonment programme approved by the then Secretary of State for Energy include requirements for samples of sediment, sea water, fish and shellfish to be obtained and examined for the presence of polychlorinated biphenyls —PCBs—and radioactivity. Surveys were carried out in 1989, 1990 and 1991. The levels of PCBs and radioactivity in water, fish and shellfish, and of radioactivity in sediments, were all within the background levels found elsewhere in the North sea. Some sediment samples taken within 500 m of the platform showed elevated levels of PCBs, but these were not increasing. The measurements of PCBs in water, fish and shellfish, and in sediments further out appear to indicate that the PCBs in the sediments close to the remains of the installation are not giving rise to elevated levels in the biota.

The conditions provide for repetition of the surveys and sampling for PCBs biennially until my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is satisfied that there is no significant risk to the marine environment from PCBs associated with transformers formerly located on the installation. In addition, samples taken after 1994 will be examined for radioactivity.

The conditions also required that within a radius of 500 m the seabed should be surveyed to determine the position of any remains of the installation. This was done in 1990 and will be repeated in 1993 and biennially thereafter until my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is satisfied that any movement of debris will not cause unjustifiable interference with fishing. Outside the 500 m zone, to a radius of 1,500 m, the conditions required that the seabed be surveyed and trawled to recover debris identified, and that any debris too large or heavy to be lifted in a trawl should be recovered by other means. This operation will be completed next year.

Gas Pipelines

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the future construction of gas pipelines, to the United Kingdom from Europe and non-European nations.

Mr. Eggar: I am not aware of any decisions by companies wishing to proceed with the construction of new gas pipelines from Europe or a non-European country to the United Kingdom. The then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy announced to the House on 30 January 1992 that a group of companies had begun a feasibility study of a gas pipeline from the United Kingdom to the continent, with a view to initial exports of United Kingdom gas. Construction of a planned gas pipeline between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland is due to begin shortly.

Gas (Electricity Generation)

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of gas used for electricity generation is not provided by British Gas and United Kingdom-based companies.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his projections for non-United Kingdom gas consumption for (a) the next decade and (b) the next 50 years in the electricity generating industry.

Mr. Eggar: In 1991 the United Kingdom imported 7 billion cu m of Norwegian gas, almost all from the Frigg field. Production from this field is declining rapidly and will cease around 1997. Some additional gas from the Frigg area will be imported from 1993 for around 16 years. On 30 January 1992 the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy announced that the Government would facilitate two imports of Norwegian gas for sale to National Power and an independent power generation project. These are the only firm proposals to import gas of which I am aware.

The review my right hon. Friend announced to the House on 21 October will look into the latest estimates of likely gas reserves, and will consider the scale of gas-generated power stations in production, in build and in the planning process.

Deep-mine Coal

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what studies have been undertaken into the costs associated with re-opening deep-mine coalfields and the feasibility of such operations.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal has gained significant experience of the feasibility and cost of putting closed deep mines on to a care and maintenance basis with a view to possible re-opening. In recent years four major closed mines—Carway Drift, Frances, Monktonhall and Thorne —have been put on to a care and maintenance basis and one—Monktonhall—is being prepared for re-opening by the Monktonhall Mineworkers Consortium.

Regulation Costs

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was (a) the cost of the regulation in 1991-92 and (b) the number of staff employed by (i) the Office of Electricity Regulation, (ii) the Office of Gas Supply and (iii) the Office of Telecommunications.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 18 November 1992]: Details of the staffing and running costs of Offer, Oftel, and Ofgas are given in the annual reports by each director general. Copies of the reports are in the Library of the House. The most recent reports available give the following information:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Victims Charter

14. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress of the victims charter.

Mr. Jack: The charter was published in February 1990 and sets out the rights and expectations of victims of crime. It contains some 50 standards by which compliance with the charter can be judged. A recent exercise showed that 57 per cent.—31 standards—had been achieved and 39 per cent.—21 standards—were in the process of being achieved, a total of 96 per cent.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

15. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the police inquiry into the Birmingham pub bombings to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The chief constable of West Midlands police is responsible for the conduct of the investigation into the Birmingham pub bombings. It would be improper for me to comment in any way on this investigation while it is continuing.

Car Crime

16. Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to reduce car crime in the north-west.

Mr. Jack: As part of Car Crime Prevention Year we have sought to engage the whole community in a concerted effort to tackle car crime. Among the practical measures being taken in the north-west by Greater Manchester police are the promotion of vehicle watch schemes, the distribution of information packs on car security and the setting up of a special police unit to tackle car crime.

Police forces throughout the north-west have made a positive contribution to Car Crime Prevention Year and in the 12 months of the year ending June 1992 both Greater Manchester and Merseyside forces reported a fall in the level of car crimes.

Our safer cities projects in Rochdale and Salford have also taken action to educate the public in car security and have organised and funded projects aimed at diverting young people from car crime.

25. Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response there has been from British car manufacturers to the Car Crime Prevention Year.

Mr. Jack: Many car manufacturers have responded very positively to the message of Car Crime Prevention Year by contributing or promising support estimated to be worth more than £3 million.

In addition, many more new cars are now being fitted with security systems as standard equipment and security features are being given a much higher profile in the manufacturers' advertisements.

24. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review current legislation available to deal with those who steal cars and subsequently kill and maim.

Mr. Jack: The relevant law is constantly reviewed; and action to strengthen it has been taken recently. The Aggravated Vehicle-Taking Act 1992 has significantly increased the powers of the courts to deal with both drivers and passengers in a stolen car which causes damage, injury and death. In addition, we have recently announced an intention to double the maximum sentence for causing death by dangerous driving from five to 10 years imprisonment.

21. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he can report arising from Car Crime Prevention Year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: So far, Car Crime Prevention Year has been a highly successful campaign and I am pleased to say that the quarterly car crime figures for April to June 1992 show a reduction of over 2·5 per cent. on the corresponding quarter of 1991. While we cannot draw too many conclusions from this change, I hope that it is the start of a welcome trend.

22. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to receive advice from outside his Department about the future of the car crime prevention initiative.

Mr. Jack: I am pleased to tell my hon. Friend that I have recently formed a committee comprising people who are actively involved in all areas of car security and car crime prevention to advise me on these matters and we met for the first time on 20 October.

This committee brings together senior representatives from the motor manufacturers, the security equipment industry, motoring and consumer associations, the retail and leasing sectors, the insurance industry and the police.

Crime (Northumbria)

17. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet representatives of Northumbria police authority to discuss crime levels in the area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State is currently arranging to meet representatives of Northumbria police authority.

Prison Building Programme

18. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the Government's prison building programme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Eighteen of the 21 new prisons in the Government's current building programme have now opened, providing nearly 9,500 additional places. The remainder will open within the next 18 months, providing a further 1,800 places. In addition, this year we shall be spending some £200 million on improving the existing estate.

The Government's future plans include two new prisons, providing 1,200 places, on which construction work will begin in 1995-1996, as well as a continued high level of investment in the modernisation of existing prisons.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability)

19. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fines due under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 were waived in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was their total value.

Mr. Charles Wardle: For the 12 months ending 30 September 1992 the total value of charges waived was £1,758,000. Information about the number of charges is not available.

Concealed Weapons

20. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to empower police officers to conduct random searches for concealed weapons.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. Our view remains that compulsory searching should be allowed only where a police officer reasonably suspects that a weapon is being carried.

Safer Cities Initiative

23. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the main achievements of his Department's safer cities initiatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Safer cities has successfully put into practice the partnership approach under which local agencies act in concert to identify and tackle local crime problems; and the programme has supported a wide range of local crime prevention schemes with encouraging results in terms of reduction in crime and fear of crime.

Community Service Orders

26. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use being made of community service orders.

Mr. Jack: The courts are making increasing use of community service orders. In 1991, a total of 41,200 community service orders were started, an 8 per cent. increase over 1990.

Special Constables

27. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to extend the use of special constables.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The deployment of special constables in individual forces is a matter for chief constables. With the help of Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary, we are encouraging forces to make the widest and most imaginative use of special constables.

28. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of special constables; and what the figure was 12 months ago.

Mr. Charles Wardle: At 31 December 1991, the number of special constables in England and Wales was 18,072. This represents an increase of 14 per cent. on the total for 1990.

"Images of Drugs"

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement following his visit to the exhibition "Images of Drugs" in Southwark.

Mr. Jack: The exhibition, which was opened by Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, brings together the knowledge and experience of local people into a creative picture in a variety of media about the effects of drugs misuse. The exhibition is now on tour throughout the borough to schools, youth clubs, local business sites and others requesting the project for their own drug prevention purposes. It gives the people of Southwark a chance to speak in their own language about the effects of drugs on their community. The opening event, which I attended with the princess, also provided a splendid opportunity for some of the excellent local projects sponsored by the Southwark drugs prevention team to publicise their activities. I am confident that royal and ministerial attendance will have encouraged future activities, by providing a high profile focus for drugs prevention in Southwark.

In European Drugs Prevention Week, I am particularly glad to have the opportunity of praising the exhibition. It is a splendid example of how the Home Office drug prevention initiative is mobilising all sections of the community—including the business community—both in recognising the major challenge which they face and in their commitment to work together to find solutions.

Drug Offences

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing, for each police force area in England and Wales, the number of notifiable drug offences by category in each year since 1985 and the total for England and Wales.

Mr. Jack: The only notifiable offence which is drugs related is that of "trafficking in controlled drugs". This information for 1985-90 is published annually in table 3.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary tables"; copies of which are available in the Library. Information for 1991 is contained in the following table:

May Inquiry

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the projected total cost of the Sir John May inquiry; and what has been the cost to date.

Mr. Jack: The current projected final cost of Sir John May's inquiry is £1,930,000. As at the end of October 1992, the inquiry, which was set up in October 1989, had incurred expenditure of £1,357,000.

Prisoners' Requests

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners' requests or complaints referred to governors are answered within seven days.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The figure requested is not readily available and I will write to the hon. Member.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners' requests or complaints referred to area managers are answered within six weeks (a) in total and (b) in each prison service area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the period April to September 1992, 69 per cent. of area managers' answers to prisoners' requests or complaints were sent within six weeks. For individual areas the figures were:

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to alter the policy whereby all who have a well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion may enjoy the full protection afforded by the Geneva convention on refugees.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We are fully committed to meeting our obligations under the convention.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances his Department will issue more visas to victims of the war in Croatia who are currently displaced or refugees.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 3 November 1992, at columns 128-29. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary also made it clear in his statement of 5 November that the Government will be discussing with the international organisations the numbers and timing of the evacuation of certain categories of specially vulnerable cases to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has made a decision on the 180 Bosnian refugees whose application for entry into the United Kingdom has been considered by his Department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary decided on 16 November that six members of this group, who have existing close family ties with the United Kingdom, should be issued with visas. One hundred and eighty cases who have insubstantial or no links with this country are to be refused and eight other cases, including two medical cases, are under consideration.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent consultations Her Majesty's Government have had with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his European Community counterparts about the future safety and well-being of refugees from Bosnia.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government are in constant touch with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees about arrangements for assisting those displaced from their homes in Bosnia. We are finalising with the UNHCR arrangements and timing for the admission and reception of 150 ex-detainees from camps in Bosnia-Herzegovina plus their dependants. This is an initial group and the UNHCR is aware of the United Kingdom's readiness to consider other similar humanitarian groups, including detainees, whom the international organisations judge should be evacuated. The United Kingdom is in regular contact with our European Community partners about these matters.

Vulnerable Prisoner Units

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which prisons currently have vulnerable prisoner units; and how many prisoners were held in each of those units on the most convenient recent date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows which establishments have vulnerable prisoner units and the number of prisoners held in these units on 17 November.

Prisoners (Protection)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were being held on rule 43 or, in the case of young offenders, rule 46 for their own protection on the most convenient recent date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 17 November, 1,539 prisoners were being held on rule 43 or rule 46 for their own protection. The following list shows a breakdown of these prisoners by establishment type.

	Number
Local prisons	1,109

Offences in Prisons

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions governors have invited the police to investigate alleged offences within prisons; and how many prosecutions have resulted since 1 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Passport Fees

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about passport fees.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Privy Council has approved an Order in Council, the Consular Fees (Amendment) Order 1992, which gives authority for an increase in passport fees on 22 November. The fee for a standard 32-page passport will increase from £15 to £18, for a frequent traveller's 48-page passport from £22·50 to £27, for a British visitor's passport from £7·50 to £12 and for a British visitor's passport, including spouse, from £11·25 to £18. The fee for an excursion document to France rises from £2 to £3 and that for a collective passport from £30 to £40. The fee for amending a passport to add particulars of children goes up from £4 to £5. The fees for amendments involving the holder's name, photograph or description are increased from £3 to £5.

This is the first general increase in passport fees for nine years and overall is well below the increase in inflation in that time. In relation to the cost of travel abroad, a fee of £18 for a standard passport or £12 for a British visitor's passport is still very good value for money.

Drugs (Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the reported drug finds in each of the London prisons for the period from 1 January to 1 November.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been a total of 492 recorded drug finds in prison service establishments in London from 1 January 1992 to 1 November 1992. The table shows a breakdown of the reported finds.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he is making for consultations on wheel clamping on private land; and when he will expect replies to the consultation.

Mr. Jack: The Government intend to conduct a public consultation exercise on the problems associated with wheel clamping on private land in England and Wales. For this purpose, a detailed discussion paper is being prepared. This will be issued as soon as possible and will include details about the closing date for replies to the consultation exercise.

Juvenile Offenders

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken to deal with the hard core of juvenile offenders who persistently reoffend.

Mr. Jack: The Government understand and share the current concern about what appears to be a comparatively small number of juveniles who persistently reoffend. We are therefore looking urgently at the powers available to the courts and to the other authorities who deal with young offenders as well as at the facilities available at the institutions and other places to which they may be sent in order to decide what new measures it may be sensible to introduce. I would also draw my hon. Friend's attention to some of the recently implemented provisions in the Criminal Justice Act 1991. Inter alia, the Act places courts under a duty to bind over the parents of offenders under the age of 16 if they are satisfied that to do so would reduce the risk of further offending and it significantly strengthens their powers to determine what should happen to those juveniles who are refused bail and remanded to local authority accommodation. The effect of those provisions will be closely monitored.

Young Offenders Institutions

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of sexual abuse have been recorded at young offenders institutions in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current prison service policy is that details of all assaults are recorded, including sexual assaults. Investigations are made as appropriate, but the system at present does not allow for easy retrieval of information relating specifically to sexual assault.

The reporting of incidents by prison establishments in England and Wales is currently under review, as is the system for the storage and retrieval of information about incidents. An improved system for reporting incidents, and for storing and retrieving information about incidents, is expected to be in place by the middle of 1993.

It is envisaged that, when the new systems are in place, more detailed information will be available about all assaults, including those with a sexual element.

Prison Accommodation

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total certified and functional accommodation in the prison service; and what is the projected accommodation level for each of the next seven years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total certified normal accommodation—CNA—available for use in the prison service estate on 16 November was 45,650. The projected average CNA for each of the next seven years is as follows:

	CNA
1993-94	47,573
1994-95	48,197
1995-96	49,334
1996-97	50,098
1997-98	50,216
1998-99	50,264
1999-2000	50,264

Sunday Trading

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will include the compromise solution on shopping hours submitted by Marks and Spencer, Iceland Frozen Foods, Outlets Providing for Everyday Needs and other retailers, as one of the options for reform of the Shops Act 1950 to be presented to Parliament.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to make a statement soon about our proposals for reform.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Wolds private prison will reach full capacity; and when he will conduct an assessment of the functioning of Wolds prison so that the feasibility of further private prisons can be assessed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrangements are being made to transfer to HM prison Wolds the catchment areas of Kingston-upon-Hull Crown court and committing magistrates courts. This change will take effect from 4 January 1993. I expect that Wolds will reach full capacity within a few months.

There is continual assessment of the functioning of the prison by the controller and a two-year evaluation study at Wolds is being undertaken by Hull university.

Strangeways Prison

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the certified normal accommodation will be at Strangeways prison when it becomes fully functional in 1993; and if he will give an undertaking that Strangeways will not be allowed to become overcrowded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The certified normal accommodation of Manchester prison will be 971 when it becomes fully operational. This level of accommodation may not be reached until June 1994. When the refurbished main prison is opened in September 1993, the old remand centre which is currently the only accommodation in use could be closed. This will be in order to refurbish K wing and to carry out security improvements.

The prison service will aim to avoid the population exceeding 971 by arranging for sentenced prisoners to be transferred to serve their sentence in training prisons. But if it becomes essential to do so—for example, in order to avoid the use of police cells—the population of the prison could rise to 1,150.

Prison Population

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his latest projections of the prison population for each of the next seven years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest projections of the prison population, based on data available up to the end of 1991, were published in a Home Office statistical bulletin "Projections of long term trends in the Prison population to 2000", Issue 10/92, published 28 May 1992. These projections do not take into account any prison places saved as a result of extra resources to strenghen initiatives aimed at diverting offenders from custody which were agreed in the autumn statement 1992. A copy of the bulletin is available in the Library.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Home Office has three agencies: the Fire Service College, the Forensic Science Service and the United Kingdom Passport Agency, and a fourth—the Prison Service Agency—is due to be launched in April 1993. As the then Prime Minister explained to the House on 24 October 1988, at column 14, the status of potential agencies is carefully considered before the agency is launched. The future status of an agency will normally be re-examined during the periodic review of an agency's framework document which is a standard part of each agency's arrangements.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing for each police area in England and Wales for each of the last three years (a) the number of arrests for drug trafficking, (b) the number of cautions for drug trafficking and (c) the number of convictions for drug trafficking.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1992]: Information on arrests is not collected centrally. The table shows the number of cautions, prosecutions and convictions for drug trafficking offences for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991, which is provisional, by police force area.

Wrongful Convictions

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many allegations of wrongful conviction upon indictment have been received during each of the last 10 years by C3 division of his Department with a view to investigation and possible reference to the Court of Appeal under section 17 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968; and, of those, how many cases in each year have been (a) investigated by C3 division, (b) sent to Ministers for a decision, (c) referred to the Court of Appeal and (d) resulted in the Court of Appeal finding that individuals had been wrongly convicted; and what was the average length of time between an allegation having been referred to C3 and a finding of wrongful conviction by the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1992]: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The available information is as follows:

Cautions and Discontinued Cases

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons were cautioned in England and Wales during the first six months of 1992;

(2) how many persons were subject to discontinuance from prosecution in the first six months of 1992.

Mr. Jack: No information is yet available on cautions or cases discontinued during the first half of 1992. The most recent information is for 1991 and was published in October 1992—Home Office statistical bulletin "Cautions, Court Proceedings and Sentencing".

Remand Prisoners (Psychiatric Reports)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many defendants charged with an imprisonable offence were remanded under section 35 of the Mental Health Act 1983 to a hospital for reports in 1991 and for the first six months of 1992.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

During the year ending 31 March 1990—the latest information held centrally—283 defendants charged with an imprisonable offence were remanded under section 35 of the Mental Health Act 1983 to a hospital for reports.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each district office, the total social fund budget in each month, for the last 12-month period for which figures are available, for (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans; how much was left of each category by (i) November and (ii) December; and which offices (1) applied for and (2) received additional resources.

Mr. Scott: Social fund grant and loan budgets are allocated on an annual basis. The Secretary of State announced an £8 million increase to the social fund budget on 2 November 1992. All districts received additional resources. Details of individual district budgets and expenditure are in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State (1) what were the social fund grants and loans budgets for offices in the northern region for 1992-93; and what was the most recently available cumulative spend figure for the current year as a percentage of that total in each case;

(2) if he will list the social fund grants and loans budgets for each office in the northern region in each year since the introduction of the social fund; and if he will also list these budgets indexed against (a) the retail prices index and (b) the social fund national spends;

(3) what was the distribution of the extra social fund allocation between offices and regions in cash and percentage terms; and what this represented in each case as a percentage uplift of the base budget.

Mr. Scott: Details of allocations, expenditure and "real terms" expenditure, both nationally and by district and local office, are in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced an £8 million increase to the social fund budget on 2 November 1992. All districts have received additional resources, details of which are being placed in the Library.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the notional tariff of income assessements on relevant capital for benefit claimants for each year since 1986; and if he will now review these arrangements following the reduction in interest rates.

Mr. Burt: The tariff income rule in the income-related benefits was introduced in 1988 and has not been revised. The level of income assumed from capital is calculated by ignoring the first £3,000 and taking into account £1 a week for every £250, or part of £250, between £3,000 and the upper capital limit for the particular benefit.

The formula for calculating tariff income is not linked to, nor is it meant to imply, any particular rate of return that could be secured from investment. The rule gives most help to people with the least savings.

The tariff income rule is kept under review, but we have no plans for change at present.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a regional breakdown of the total budget of his Department for each of the past five years; and if he will give a regional breakdown of expenditure on each benefit for which his Department is responsible for each of the past five years, in cash and real terms.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 9 November 1992]: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the following table, which appears in "Regional Trends", presents an estimate of the regional breakdown of expenditure in respect of some major benefits. The table is for 1989-90, the most recent year available.

[1] The quality of these estimates varies between benefits. For some of them, including retirement pension, the regional breakdown in Great Britain is based solely on population estimates. Because of changes in method, the estimates might not be entirely consistent with those published for previous years.

[2] The benefits covered do not account for the total value of social security benefits paid.

[3] Based on mid-1989 population estimates.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of (a) the annual cost or saving, (b) the numbers of gainers or losers, (c) the average amounts of weekly gains or losses and (d) the maximum amounts of weekly gains and losses in individual cases, which would result from adjustments of the housing benefit taper from 65 per cent. to (i) 50 per cent., (ii) 55 per cent., (iii) 60 per cent., (iv) 70 per cent., (v) 75 per cent. and (vi) 80 per cent.

Mr. Burt: The information requested for (a), (b) and (c) is shown in the table.

Figures for (d) could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of each benefit for which his Department is responsible in each region of the United Kingdom for each of the past five years.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 9 November 1992]: The available information on numbers of recipients by region is set out in the tables.

Independent living fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the expenditure of the independent living allowance was represented by VAT payments in 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: The independent living fund is an independent charitable trust administered by trustees. Matters of policy and administration are issues for the trustees of the fund.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how premiums available to disabled income support claimants assist low-income disabled persons unable to claim support.

Mr. Burt: Premiums that are available to income support claimants are also included in the calculation of housing benefit and community charge benefit. This increases the level of those benefits for low-income disabled people not entitled to income support.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will introduce legislation to provide a determination of an individual disabled person's financial needs, based on the additional costs associated with disability; (2) how present benefit systems provide financial support to disabled persons with special dietary needs; (3) what additional measures he is considering to meet the income requirements of the disabled; (4) if he will review benefits available to the disabled in order to consider degrees of disability.

Mr. Scott: In 1984-85 the Department of Social Security commissioned the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to carry out a major independent survey of the circumstances of disabled people. On the basis of the OPCS findings, the Government announced in the 1990 Command Paper, "The Way Ahead", a phased package of measures aimed at improving provision for people with disabilities.

The improvements were targeted at those identified by OPCS as most in need: people with moderate to severe disabilities who did not qualify for attendance allowance or mobility allowance; those disabled early in life; and people who wished to gain independence by going out to work.

The Government introduced disability living allowance and disability working allowance as the most important element of the package of improvements, which also included adjustments to the qualifying criteria and improvements in the level of certain benefits.

A system of disability benefits which attempted to cover a whole range of specific needs would be far more complicated than the existing structure, both for claimants to understand and for staff to adjudicate and administer. A system based on the severity of a person's disability, taking no account of levels of need for help would be poorly targeted and would produce an unacceptably high number of losers.

The Government believe that the new structure of benefits for disabled people is the most appropriate to their needs and provides a more coherent and comprehensive system of disability benefits than ever before.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to revise the 80 per cent. disability test for severe disability allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will commission a study into the effectiveness of the current range of disabled persons' benefits in meeting needs previously addressed by supplementary benefits additional payments.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he will take to increase the take-up of disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: We shall be continuing the campaign to promote awareness of the benefit by writing individually to people receiving some of the qualifying benefits; offering advice and training to employers, advisers and welfare organisations and placing features in the specialist and local press.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals are currently outstanding on disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: On 16 November there were four appeals outstanding on disability working allowance.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the estimated cost of providing a carer for every disabled person; and what is the actual annual expenditure made available for non-professional carers.

Mr. Scott: Invalid care allowance provides an income maintenance benefit, at a cost of £262 million in 1991-92, for carers who forgo the opportunity of full-time employment to care for a severely disabled person who receives either the highest or middle rate care component of disability living allowance or attendance allowance. It is not possible to estimate the cost of providing a level of care in the unspecified circumstances described by the hon. Member.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend payments of disablement living allowance to persons under the age of five years and over the age of 65 years.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so. There are no age limits for the receipt of disability living allowance once it has been awarded and the care component is already available to children under the age of five years. Attendance allowance is available to those becoming disabled after the age of 65.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will abolish the residency test for severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Community Care Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend community care grant regulations to extend claimant rights to those in local authority establishments, including mental rehabilitation units.

Mr. Scott: No. There is no need to amend the social fund legislation because people who are receiving income support and who leave the establishments mentioned are already eligible for community care grants, which are discretionary, and each case is decided by a social fund officer on its own merits.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend community care grant regulations to include low-income groups, other than income support recipients, such as invalidity benefit recipients and pensioners.

Mr. Scott: No. The current income support rule focuses the available resources on those most in need of this type of assistance. The rule is clear and simple to understand and has always been used in this type of scheme.

Family Credit

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made with the inquiry into the arrangements for family credit claims by self-employed persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Progress of the research being undertaken by the social policy research unit at York university into family credit and the self-employed has been slower than expected. Results are not expected to be published until spring 1993.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate he has made of the level of the Christmas bonus for pensioners which would be required to match the equivalent purchasing power of the £10 bonus of 1974;

(2) what is the total estimated additional cost of fully indexing the pensioners' Christmas bonus to achieve the same purchasing power as the £10 bonus paid in 1974.

Miss Widdecombe: The Christmas bonus, which is paid regardless of need and which no Government have increased since its introduction in 1972, would now be worth £49·75 had it been increased annually since 1974 in line with prices. The additional cost would be approximately £489 million.

Income Support

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families with one or more wage earners qualify for family income support.

Mr. Burt: At April 1992, a total of 369,000 families, with one wage earner, received family credit and 19,000 with two wage earners.

Mr. Ken Vince

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the case of the late Mr. Ken Vince about whose claim for mobility allowance the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe wrote to the chief executive of the Benefits Agency on 20 July and who died two months before the chief executive replied to the right hon. Member on 4 November.

Mr. Scott: The administration of mobility allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the right hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alfred Morris, dated 18 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Mobility Allowance Claim of the late Mr Ken Vince.

I am now in a position to confirm that a decision has been made on the late Mr Vince's claim and this has been notified direct to his next of kin. I have replied to you separately in greater detail about this.

Clearly, your constituent's claim was not handled as efficiently as it should have been. I offer my sincere apologies to Mr. Vince's family for the distress this must have caused and also for the delay in replying to your correspondence. You will be aware of the problems the Benefits Agency has faced since the introduction of Disability Living Allowance in April and the effects this has had on outstanding Mobility Allowance and Attendance Allowance claims. My letter of 19 October to all Members set out the measures we have taken to resolve these problems successfully.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Office Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Clergy (Ordination) Measure

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what information the Commissioners hold on the number of applications made for a faculty under the Measure, following the passing of the Clergy (Ordination) Measure, and the number granted; and whether he will break this down according to whether or not the applicant had commenced approved theological college training before the Measure was given Royal Assent.

Mr. Michael Alison: None. This is not a matter for the Commissioners. Faculties under this Measure are granted by the archbishop of the appropriate province.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Gummer: Responsibility for health and safety is delegated to the chief executives of Agricultural Development Advisory Service, the Central Science Laboratory, the Central Veterinary Laboratory, the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and the Intervention Board executive agency, which is a separate Government Department responsible to the four United Kingdom Agriculture Departments. I have asked each chief executive to write to the hon. Member to ouline their policy and have also asked them to place any relevant documents in the Libraries of both Houses.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Walsh to Mr. John McAllion, dated 19 November 1992:

ADAS is in the process of developing its own Health and Safety policy, which will be placed in the Library of the House when it is available.

The current situation is covered by the reply given to Dr. David Clark MP (South Shields) on 8 July 1992, Official Report, column 234.

Letter from Dr. P. I. Stanley to Mr. John McAllion, dated November 1992:

In its Annual Business Plan 1992-93, The Central Science Laboratory gave a commitment to issue its revised health and safety policy statement by the end of December 1992. The statement, which represents a major revision of the previous document in force prior to agency status, is in its final stages of preparation and on target for completion by the end of the year. When the policy statement has been agreed, it will be placed in the Library of the House.

Letter from Dr. T. W. A. Little to Mr. John McAllion, dated 19 November 1992:

As you know the Minister has asked that Chief Executives of executive agencies for which he is responsible write to you direct with their answer to your question.

I am arranging with the Ministry's Parliamentary Clerk for a copy of the Central Veterinary Laboratory's Health and Safety Policy Statement to be placed in the Library of the House of Commons forthwith.

In his reply to your question about executive Agencies in MAFF, the Minister said that as health and safety was a matter delegated to Chief Executives, he would ask them to write to you and to arrange for a copy of their policy to be placed in the Library of the House. I am doing so as Chief Executive of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD).

The VMD health and safety statement is set out in Section 4 of the VMD Personnel Charter, a copy of which is provided to every member of staff. One has now been placed in the Library of the House. As part of a review of the Personal Charter which is currently under way, the health and safety statement is being updated. I will arrange for a copy of the revised statement and Charter to be placed in the Library of the House once this has been completed.

Letter from Guy Stapleton to Mr. John McAllion, dated 19 November 1992:

I am responding to your Question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about the health and safety policy of executive agencies. Although the Intervention Board is a separate Government Department, I am responsible to the four Agriculture Ministers and as the subject of your question is a matter within my operational responsibility, the Minister has asked me to reply.

I attach a copy of the health and safety policy statement for the Intervention Board as it appears in the Agency's staff manual to which all staff have access.

Together with our Trade Union Side (TUS) we are currently reviewing this policy statement in the light of recent and forthcoming legislation, and guidance from the Civil Service Occupational Health Service (CSOHS) about the development of health and safety policies. Our intention is not only to update the policy statement, but also to issue a health and safety booklet to all staff which will bring together in a convenient format all necessary guidance on health and safety matters.

We implement our health and safety policy through a joint committee with the TUS which normally meets twice a year. In addition we:

(a) Carry out regular joint workplace inspections and organise training through the CSOHS;

(b) Issue guidance to staff on the control of hazardous substances which are covered by the inspections at (a) above;

(c) Carry out checks on all electrical equipment to ensure that it complies with statutory requirements;

(d) Have introduced a no smoking policy in work areas earlier this year;

(e) Have offered voluntary health screening in 1991 and over 700 staff participated. As part of this year's programme advice seminars on stress, smoking, alcohol, healthy eating and heart care will be provided.

Preparations are well in hand to meet the obligations of the VDU Directive which comes into operation on 1 January 1993. Further EC Directive on health and safety issues are expected in the near future and the Agency's objective will be to embrace those changes within its policy and procedures.

I am sending a copy of this letter and enclosure to the Library of the House.

Caterpillars

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to grant funding for research projects on the use of caterpillars to counter the spread of bracken.

Mr. Curry: We are currently reviewing our research priorities in this area.

Agri-environmental Measures

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what action he is taking to ensure speedy and effective implementation of the agri-environmental measures agreed as part of the common agricultural policy reforms during the United Kingdom presidency of the EC;

(2) if he will make it his policy to extend existing mechanisms for the support of environmentally friendly farming to include all wildlife-rich agricultural habitats in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: We are working on the development of a new nitrate reduction programme especially where this is necessary to protect drinking water sources, a new scheme to encourage organic farming, a new scheme to reduce livestock numbers where this will be environmentally beneficial, measures to increase the environmental benefits of set-aside and payments to manage land for public access and recreation. Details of these proposals will be issued for consultation this winter. They are in addition to plans to introduce a series of new environmentally sensitive areas. This combination of measures will greatly increase the coverage of schemes to support environmentally friendly farming.

Organic Agriculture

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made at the EC Agriculture Council on the provision of financial encouragement for organic agriculture.

Mr. Curry: The UK pressed for the inclusion within the agri-environment programme of provisions for the payment of aid to organic farmers. Such provisions were adopted at the EC Agriculture Council in June.

Monetary Compensation Amounts

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will press the EC to phase in any monetary compensatory amount adjustments due to take effect from 1 January.

Mr. Curry: Monetary compensatory amounts are due to be abolished when new agrimonetary arrangements compatible with the single market are put in place on 1 January 1993. Under the new system, the green exchange rates used to convert EC prices into sterling will be kept in line with market exchange rates. The Government have phased in the adjustment to the new system by asking the Commission to propose a 7 per cent. devaluation of the green pound. This was agreed at the Agriculture Council on 16 November. If the present market exchange rate for sterling continues until the end of the year, a further devaluation of the green pound will be necessary.

Ostrich Farms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ostrich farms have been set up in the United Kingdom; and if will list their locations.

Mr. Soames: This information is not held centrally, and could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

Money Compensation Amounts

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the effect of the recent devaluation of the pound sterling and the resulting effect on the monetary compensation amount scheme on the average food bill of a family of four.

Mr. Curry: Monetary compensatory amounts are due to be abolished when new agrimonetary arrangements compatible with the single market are put in place on 1 January 1993. Under the new system, the green exchange rates used to convert EC prices into sterling will be kept in line with market exchange rates. If the present market exchange rate for sterling continues until the end of the year, a further devaluation of the green pound will be necessary, in addition to the 7 per cent. devaluation agreed at the Agriculture Council on 16 November. While the recent devaluation will increase farm support prices, food prices will not increase proportionately. EC price support arrangements only affect a limited range of commodities and the cost of raw materials is only a small proportion of the cost of many foods. It is estimated that the 7 per cent. devaluation will raise the food price index by less than 1 per cent. It is too early to say what the effect of any further devaluation food prices would be.

Wild Boar

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many units are producing European wild boar in the United Kingdom for the meat market.

Mr. Curry: No official records are kept on the number of farms producing wild boar, but we estimate there are currently about 40 units in the United Kingdom.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has decided how entitlement to suckler cow premium should be allocated among new entrants.

Mr. Curry: There is provision for new entrants to have some claim on the national reserve of suckler cow premium quota. We are currently considering the detailed implementation, and interested parties will be consulted before final decisions are taken.

Food Publications

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the cost was to public funds of editing, publishing and printing the series of publications "Food Safety" PB0551, "Food Sense" PB0549, "About Food Additives" PB0552, "Understanding Food Labels" PB05523, "Food Protection" PB0554 and "Healthy Eating" PB0550; and what financial contribution was made by the food or retailing industries.

Mr. Curry: The "Food Sense" series of booklets was launched in August 1991, as part of a three-year campaign, to provide attractive and easily understood information in response to public concern about food issues. Some 12·5 million booklets, in the series referred to, have been printed so far. The costs for production and print have been met from within the Department's paid publicity budget and are as follows:

	Numbers printed millions	Production costs £	Print costs £
Food Sense	7·40	115,551	460,270
Healthy Eating	1·05	38,077	61,230
Food Safety	1·15	38,077	63,785
About Food Additives	1·10	38,077	67,352
Understanding Food Labels	1·05	38,077	59,310
Food Protection	0·80	38,077	59,760

There have been no contributions from the food or retailing industries.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Curry: None.

Sheep Premium

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Everitt of Hemsbrook farm, Newton road, Littlehempston, Totnes, can expect to receive the first instalment of sheep premium; why there has been a delay in processing this claim; and whether Mr. and Mrs. Everitt will receive compensation for the loss of money they have suffered.

Mr. Curry: A payable order for the first instalment under the 1992 scheme was issued to Mr. and Mrs. Everitt on 5 November 1992. Applications from producer groups have been subject to additional checks this year in order to meet new European Community requirements and there has been no unreasonable delay in processing this claim.

Epping Forest

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to increase awareness of Epping forest, Essex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Epping forest is owned by the Corporation of London. It is managed under the terms of the Epping Forest Act 1878, which requires the conservators of the forest to preserve the natural aspect and the varied vegetation of the forest as well as the public's right to use it as an open space for recreation and enjoyment. It has a large variety of habitats of high nature conservation value and most of the forest has been designated a site of special scientific interest. A balance therefore has to be sought between public use and the protection of the forest's environment.

We are satisfied that the forest is well known to the general public—they already make good use of it and the conservators provide several facilities for visitors—and we do not consider that it is necessary to increase awareness of it any further.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will approve and press for a phase-out of methyl bromide at the Montreal protocol negotiations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he is taking to phase out the use of methyl bromide in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 5 November, Official Report, column 372.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what instructions have been issued to safeguard persons using methyl bromide.

Mr. Soames: The information that has been issued to safeguard persons using methyl bromide is as follows:

1. Guidance Note CS12: "Fumigation using methyl bromide", available from the Health and Safety Executive.
2. Approved Code of Practice (ACOP):

"Control of substances hazardous to health in fumigation operations"

(ISBN 0118854690), available from HMSO.

Detailed instructions relating to individual product use and any necessary precautions that must be taken will be found on the product labels.

Crop Plantings

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the percentage of United Kingdom plantings of winter wheat, spring wheat, spring barley, winter barley, oats, rye, sugar beet, potatoes and oilseed rape of (a) the most popular variety, (b) the two most popular varieties and (c) the three most popular varieties; if he will name the varieties; and whether the percentages of plantings to the top three varieties covers a greater or lesser proportion of total plantings to that crop than was the case 10 years ago.

Mr. Curry: Although actual planting by variety is not recorded for cereals and oilseed rape, the tables show figures based upon information collected under certified seed production records. The use of seed retained on the farm outside this system is not recorded.

For potatoes, the three most popular varieties of potatoes planted in 1992 in the United Kingdom were Maris Piper (12 per cent.); Record (10 per cent.) and Estima (9 per cent.) accounting in total for 31 per cent. of the crop, compared with 1982 when they were Maris Piper (17 per cent.), Desireé (14 per cent.) and Record (8 per cent.), accounting in total for 39 per cent. of the crop.

Veal Calves (Transport)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for how long veal calves transported from the United Kingdom may be sealed in transporters; what length of time United Kingdom regulations allow for animal transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Currently calves for export are not sealed in transporters. Regulations in Great Britain require farm animals to be offered food and water at intervals not exceeding 12 hours, unless the journey can be completed within 15 hours. For export journeys over 18 hours, a licence to export is issued when the exporter has made arrangements to feed and water the animals at suitable intervals.

SCOTLAND

Land Transactions

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps he is taking to prevent the speculative sale of Scottish land to owners and developers furth of Scotland;

(2) what record is being maintained of private land transactions in Scotland in which ownership of land is transferred furth of Scotland;

(3) what estimate has been made of land in Scotland currently owned by (a) Germans (b) Americans and (c) Belgians; and if he envisages a limit being placed on foreign ownership of Scottish land.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No specific record is maintained for the purpose of identifying the nationality of the owners of land in Scotland. General information on land transactions is, however, available from the Registers of Scotland executive agency.

We have no plans to impose restrictions on the market for land. In a free society, sellers must be allowed to dispose of their possessions as they think best.

Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a percentage figure for the present financial year equivalent to the figure of 10·66 per cent. stated as applying from 1993 for the public expenditure change formula based on the 1991 census population count results, as indicated in his press notice of 12 November.

Mr. Lang: The equivalent percentage figure applied to the current financial year in the 1991 public expenditure survey was 11·76 per cent.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Lang: None.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within his Department's buildings in the past five years.

Mr. Lang: None.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the results of his Department's research evaluating the effect of compulsory competitive tendering on Scottish local authorities.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has today published the report "Evaluation of Compulsory Competitive Tendering for Scottish Local Authority Services". The research examined a selection of case study services in a small sample of local authorities to determine the costs and results of providing certain services before and after CCT. The report identifies a number of savings and increased efficiency in the provision of these services after tendering.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate has been made of the number of awards of sequestration for each of the five years immediately following commencement of operation of the provision of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Bill, as amended; and whether he will take steps to ensure that access to the sequestration process is not restricted.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The number of awards of sequestration in future years will be subject to a wide variety of factors, including the response of debtors and creditors to the legislation currently before Parliament. It is not, therefore, yet possible to estimate accurately the number of awards for the period requested.

The Bankruptcy (Scotland) Bill already provides for access to sequestration in appropriate circumstances, subject to certain necessary safeguards to balance the interests of debtors and creditors.

Courts

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the courts which (a) have undergone renovation in the past four years and (b) are being refurbished at this moment; if he will give the cost of such work; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

Vulnerable Witnesses

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the courts which have live closed-circuit television links and associated equipment for the purpose of taking evidence from those deemed to be vulnerable witnesses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Facilities for closed circuit television links for child witnesses have been provided on a pilot basis at the High Court in Edinburgh and Glasgow and at Edinburgh and Glasgow sheriff courts. Extension to other court houses will be considered in the light of experience of use of the system in the pilot courts.

Open Air Events

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current powers for local councils or the police to prevent open air events taking place on private land if there is a reason to expect that they will lead to disturbance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 November 1992]: District and island councils may licence public entertainments under section 41 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, provided that the local authority has previously resolved to license the particular activity in question. Where an unlicensed activity takes place in an area subject to licensing controls, the organiser is liable on conviction to an exceptionally high summary fine of up to £20,000 or up to six months imprisonment or both. If alcoholic liquor were to be sold at such an event, a liquor licence would be required under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976. A local authority could prevent such an event taking place by refusal to grant a licence or the suspension of an existing licence under either the 1976 or the 1982 Acts.

Quayle Munro

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the Scottish Office paid the firm of Quayle Munro for its report on the future of the Scottish water industry.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 October 1992]: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish) on 26 October, at columns 530-31.

HEALTH

Patients Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the results of the first quarter monitoring of the patients charter; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities, as purchasers of services, are required to publish annual reports giving details of the performance against all relevant patients charter rights and standards achieved by their providers. The national health service management executive will give an overview on performance in the chief executive's annual report for 1992-93.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the (a) actual and (b) percentage difference between the social services budget estimate and standard spending assessment in 1991-92 for each social services in England;

(2) what was the percentage difference between the personal social services budget estimate and standard spending estimate (a) in 1991-92 and (b) in 1992-93 for each social services authority in England;

(3) what is the personal social services standard spending assessment for each social services authority in england in 1992-93.

Notes:

It has been assumed that "budget" and "budget estimate" both refer to the budget submitted by authorities to central Government at the beginning of the financial year. It has also been assumed that "standard spending assessment" and "standard spending estimate" both refer to the final SSAs issued by DOE following the local authority settlement debate.

The difference shown is calculated by subtracting the SSA from the budget for each year.

Budget data has been adjusted to exclude expenditure directly funded by specific grants to make it comparable with the standard spending assessment.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage change in (a) net and (b) gross expenditure on personal social services from 1985-86 to 1991-92 adjusted by the personal social services deflator.

Mr. Yeo: The latest estimates for revenue expenditure in 1991-92 represent real terms increases of 30·4 per cent. for net expenditure and 22·5 per cent. for gross expenditure over expenditure in 1985-86.

Treatment Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost in England in 1990-91 and 1991-92 of treating (a) an in-patient case in an acute hospital, (b) an out-patient in an acute hospital, (c) a day case in an acute hospital and (d) an accident and emergency patient in an acute hospital.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. Expenditure on in-patients and day cases is no longer separately identified. Expenditure on day cases is now combined with that for in-patients to form a new category: patients using a bed. Expenditure is also identified by specialty rather than the type of hospital in which a patient is treated. Figures for 1990-91 are given in the table. Figures for 1991-92 are not yet available.

Acute in-patient and day case	815
Acute out-patient attendance	41
Accident and emergency attendance	24

Osteoporosis

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS of treatment of osteoporosis patients, both in hospital and the community, in each year since 1985.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. However, the office of health economics has estimated that hospital in-patient expenditure on osteoporosis was £128 million in 1985-86 in England and Wales. In 1991-92 prices, this figure would be of the order of £200 million. These estimates do not take into account the cost of out-patient treatment and the costs of general practitioner services, including the prescribing of hormone replacement therapy and other drugs.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of recorded cases of osteoporosis in the years 1985 to 1991.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available in the form requested, as there is no requirement to record the diagnosis in general practice and many patients with osteoporosis will not be admitted to hospital. The estimated number of discharges and deaths with a main diagnosis of osteoporosis was 2,000 in England in 1985, according to the hospital in-patient inquiry. The estimated number of completed episodes, ordinary and day case admissions, with a main diagnosis of osteoporosis was 3,700 in England in 1989-90, according to the hospital episode statistics. The effect on the figures of the change in definition cannot readily be quantified, but it is believed to be of a relatively small order of magnitude.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the level of capital spending on hospital and community health services in net terms after deducing proceeds from land and property sales, in each year since 1974-75 (a) in cash terms, (b) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator and (c) adjusted using the relevant index of NHS prices;

(2) to ask the Secretary of State for Health, what was the level of (a) total NHS expenditure, (b) current expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (c) capital expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (d) expenditure on the family practitioner services, (e) expenditure on centrally funded NHS services and (f) expenditure on personal social services, in each year since 1974-75, (i) in cash terms, (ii) adjusted using the relevant pay and prices index and (iii) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply, 18 November]: I regret that there was an error in my previous reply. The last figure in the HCHS capital net table was incorrectly calculated. The revised table is as follows:

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend to doctors working in trusts the existing rights that hospital doctors have in paragraph 330 of their terms and conditions of service to speak out in the interests of their patients' health; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for national health service trusts to agree terms and conditions with doctors and other staff whom they employ. However, I am currently consulting widely on a proposal to issue guidance to the national health service—including NHS trusts—on the rights and responsibilities of managers and staff in this matter.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to allow trust hospitals to sell off pathology or related services to the private sector; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for trusts themselves to decide whether it would be better to provide their own pathology services or to subcontract with other national health service or independent providers of such services. Whatever they decide, trusts must include pathology costs in the overall price of the relevant contract with their purchasers, and must not charge individuals for pathology services which are provided as part of national health service treatment.

NHS Pay

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing national health service pay expenditure in 1990-91, 1992-93 and her best estimate for 1993-94, showing the figures both in millions of pounds and current prices.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table shows the best available figures for expenditure on pay in the national health service in 1990-91, 1992-93 and 1993-94. The figure for 1992-93 is the latest esimate available and the range for 1993-94 is consistent with a zero to 1·5 per cent. pay increase in public sector pay, announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement.

Financial year	Nominal	1992-93
1990-91[1]	13·9	15·6
1992-93[2]	17·0	17·0
1993-94[3]	17·0 to 17·3	16·5 to 16·8

[1] Best estimate from available data.

[2] Latest estimate.

[3] Provisional range to reflect the 0-1·5 per cent. range of pay increase for the public sector contained in the autumn statement.

Hospitals (Advertising)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on her plans to allow advertising in hospital out-patient departments; what guidelines she intends to issue on such advertising; and whether the advertising of certain products will be prohibited;

(2) what contracts have been negotiated in relation to the use of advertising in accident and emergency and out-patient departments; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health authorities may allow commercial advertising in hospitals in order to generate additional income. General guidance on income generation activities by hospitals is included in a "guide to local initiatives" issued to health authorities in March 1989.

Responsibility for income generation schemes is for national health service managers. But the guidance advises health authorities that specific schemes should be congruent with the goals, culture and objectives of the health service and should certainly not contradict them. It would not be in an authority's interest to be involved in activities which are in conflict with its own aims or detract from its image in the community.

I do not intend issuing any specific guidance on advertising in hospitals.

Information on contracts for advertising in hospitals is not collected centrally.

Health Authorities (Property)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much, at current prices, was raised from the disposal of property in each regional health authority in each year since 1990; what is the current projection of funds to be raised by such disposals in 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Wednesday 18 November at column 279. Figures are not available for all regions beyond 1992-93. However, the national health service is expected to realise some £155 million from land and property disposals in 1993-94 which will be reinvested in patient care.

Health Survey

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement giving details of the health survey presently being carried out by the social survey division of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, including sample size and completion date.

Dr. Mawhinney: The health survey for England, currently being carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on behalf of the Department of Health, is a part of a continuing programme of surveys to monitor the nation's health. It is a central part of our health of the nation initiative and focuses on cardiovascular disease and associated risk factors.

The first survey took place in the autumn of 1991 and achieved a sample size of 3,100 adults. A report is due in mid-1993. The fieldwork for the 1992 survey is running from September to December. It is aiming for a sample size of 4,000 adults. The target sample size for 1993 is 17,000 adults. Results will be published annually.

Medical Audit Initiative

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 349, what guidance has been given to those involved in the medical audit initiative on (a) expenses to be claimed and (b) the standard of travel and hotel accommodation to be used consequent on their duties; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Where national health service or Department of Health staff attend meetings or events which entails an overnight stay, expenses may be claimed in accordance with standard rates and conditions set by the Treasury which reflect the seniority of the staff involved.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to ensure (a) that there is available a sufficient supply of potassium iodate tablets for distribution to the population living within 25 miles of Sizewell A and B nuclear reactors for use in the event of there occurring a major accident and (b) that the tablets can be distributed within 24 hours of an accident occurring.

Mr. Sackville: The detailed emergency planning zone around the Sizewell nuclear power station extends to a radius of 2·5 km. The size of such zones is formally approved by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate and is based on a "reference accident" for the reactor type in question. The reference accident is the maximum size of an accident that can reasonably be foreseen. While accidents worse than the reference accident could occur, this probability is so remote that detailed emergency planning against their consequences is not justified.

The provision of potassium iodate tablets is one of a number of countermeasures for which local emergency plans must make provision. Responsibility for the preparation and maintenance of arrangements for responding to nuclear emergencies in respect of particular nuclear installations currently rests with the operators, in consultation with local authorities, health authorities, the emergency services and other interests. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of Nuclear Electric for further information about the arrangements at Sizewell power station.

Smoking

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she proposes to take to tackle the incidence of smoking among children with special educational needs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government are committed to the continuation of the existing programmes on teenage smoking and to developing material aimed at parents who smoke.

We are encouraging progress towards a situation in which all educational establishments have an effective smoking policy governing not only young people but staff and all other adults using the premises.

Education in schools on the harmful effects of smoking is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Superannuation Branch

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress towards establishing her Department's NHS superannuation branch as an executive agency.

Mr. Sackville: We are pleased to announce that the NHS superannuation branch will be established as the NHS Pensions Agency on 20 November. The agency will administer the NHS occupational pension schemes for England and Wales. Its detailed objectives and functions are set out in a policy and resources framework document, copies of which are available in the Library.

The chief executive has been set the following key performance targets for the remainder of 1992-93:

1. Service Standards

a. Pension awards to be cleared:
   - (i) Within four weeks of receipt of application from employer: 89 per cent.*
   - (ii) Within eight weeks of receipt of application from employer 99 per cent.*

b. Pension age estimates for non-practitioners to be cleared:
   - (i) Within four weeks of request: 68 per cent.
   - (ii) Within eight weeks of request: 99 per cent.

c. Pensions age estimates for practitioners to be cleared:
   - (i) Within six weeks of request: 71 per cent.
   - (ii) Within eight weeks of request: 99 per cent.

d. Transfer payments to be made:
   - (i) Within eight weeks of application: 95 per cent.
   - (ii) Within 10 weeks of application: 99 per cent.

8. Citizen's charter

By 31 March 1993, to propose new mechanisms for registering stakeholders' views on agency services.

Social Services Grants

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what personal social services specific grants will be made in 1993-94.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For 1993-94 specific grants totalling £86·6 million will be available, which represents a £3·1 million or 3·7 per cent. increase, over the 1992-93 total. The specific grants for 1993-94 will be £34·4 million for mental illness, £31·8 million for social services training, £12·4 million for AIDS/HIV, £5·7 million for the guardian ad litem and reporting officer service and £2·3 million for alcohol and drugs misuse.

Abortion

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women in England and Wales in 1991 and the first half of 1992 chose medical abortion in the first nine weeks of pregnancy with Mifepristone and prostaglandin.

Mr. Sackville: Between July 1991, when Mifegyne (Mifepristone) was licensed, and December 1991, the latest period for which figures are available, the chief medical officers of England and Wales were notified of 109 abortions where the Mifepristone and prostaglandin method was used.

NHS Pay

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps she is taking to impose the 1·5 per cent. pay increase ceiling on senior and general managers in the national health service, from what date the pay ceiling will be effective; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what plans she has to impose the public sector pay ceiling of 1·5 per cent. in NHS trusts; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what steps she is taking to enforce the 1·5 per cent pay increase ceiling on all provider units in the national health service; and if she will make a statement;

(4) what account will be taken of the earnings of those who work in the national health service on performance-related pay in imposing the 1·5 per cent. pay increase ceiling; and if she will make a statement;

(5) how she intends to impose the 1·5 per cent. pay increase ceiling on dentists.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has written to the chairmen of all health authorities and NHS trusts setting out the arrangements for implementing the policy of restricting public sector pay settlements to a maximum of 1·5 per cent. in the coming year.

As the hon. Member is aware, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has written to the chairmen of the NHS review bodies amending their remits and asking them not to make recommendations on overall levels of pay, fees and allowances for 1 April 1993. For other staff whose pay and conditions are determined by our approval following negotiations in the Whitley councils and other central negotiating bodies the settlement remit will be restricted to between zero and 1·5 per cent. for each group. For those staff whose pay is not subject to central arrangements, chairmen have been asked to ensure that all settlements are restricted to between zero and 1·5 per cent. in the coming year with the pay bill increase being held as near zero as possible.

Payments under existing peformance pay schemes will continue and, under the existing pay arrangements for NHS general and senior managers, the policy will be implemented by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's direction with effect from the next review point —1 September 1993.

The dental rates study group will, as usual, be asked to recommend general dental practitioners' fees, using the target average net income (TANI) determined by Government which will be subject to the 1·5 per cent. maximum. This will take account of the recommendations of Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's fundamental review of dental remuneration which is due to be presented to Ministers by the end of the year.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what figures he has for the number of people receiving legal aid in Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board publishes statistics on the number of acts of assistance provided under the legal aid fund in its annual reports. The most recent figures appear on page 84 of the Legal Aid Board's annual report (1991/92). In criminal (Crown court) proceedings the number of defendants represented under the legal aid scheme is given each year in the Department's annual publication "Judicial Statistics". The most recent information is given in table 10.6 on page 95 of the 1991 edition. In neither instance is it possible to distinguish between assisted persons residing in Wales or England.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what information he maintains on the percentage of people receiving legal aid in Wales who went on to win their court case.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board publishes figures on the results reported in legal aid cases in its annual reports. The most recent figures are on page 56 of the Legal Aid Board annual report (1991/92). These figures can be broken down by legal aid area office. Wales, however, is served by two legal aid area offices situated in Cardiff and Chester respectively. The Chester area office also serves parts of north west England and the west midlands and it is not possible to distinguish between assisted persons residing in Wales or England.

Judges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what procedures are followed by his Department to monitor the competence of judges; and under what circumstances the Lord Chancellor would initiate the process required for dismissal of a judge.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor attaches the highest importance to the constitutional principle of judicial independence. He has established no procedures for monitoring the competence of the full-time judiciary. Recourse from a judicial decision properly lies through the normal appeal process. Judges, however, exercise their functions, for the most part, in public. The Lord Chancellor considers with great care any complaints made to him about the conduct of a judge. Under the existing legislation governing the tenure of the judiciary, Supreme Court judges hold office during good behaviour, subject only to a power of removal by the Crown on an address presented by both Houses of Parliament; the Lord Chancellor may if he thinks fit remove a circuit judge from office on the grounds of incapacity or misbehaviour. The Lord Chancellor considers each complaint fully on its merits. He will consider the removal of a judge from office only if and when he is satisfied that the relevant statutory criteria have been fully met and that such a course is in the public interest.

Visas

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department why the application for an entry clearance visa by Mr. Umar Iqbal to join his wife Shabnim Sattar in Ilford has been refused; and why the appeal will not be heard until March 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I understand that the application was refused on the grounds that the ECO was not satisfied that (1) the marriage had not been entered into primarily to obtain admission to the United Kingdom and (2) on the evidence available, adequate arrangements for maintenance and accommodation, as required under the Immigration Rules, was available without recourse to public funds. Umar Iqbal's appeal against this decision was received on 30 December 1990.

The first hearing of the appeal was held on 8 July 1991. The case was adjourned for two months to enable the appellant to arrange legal representation. At a second hearing in September the appellant's representative requested an adjournment.

At a hearing on 20 December 1991 the representative requested a further adjournment to obtain additional documentary evidence. The case was heard again on 22 June 1992 but adjourned to enable the Home Office to consider if there were now grounds to grant Mr. Iqbal an entry clearance. The Home Office have since told the appellant's representative that they do not intend to rely on the primary purpose ground for refusal but that maintenance and accommodation remain issues.

The case was listed for 25 March 1993 the next available date at the time but it may be possible to bring the hearing forward if the appellant so requests and an earlier date becomes available.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when his Department will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Ilford, South of 5 October, concerning Shabnim Sattar and her husband Mr. Umar Iqbal.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I replied to the hon. Member on 6 November 1992.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has used a private detective twice during the last five years. The first occasion, in January 1990 was at a cost of £905; and the second, in February 1991, was at a cost of £776. The firm involved on both occasions was Sabrewatch Ltd.

Debtors (Guidelines)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidelines that are issued to bailiffs and court officers when dealing with cases where a debtor is an in-patient at a mental illness hospital.

Mr. John M. Taylor: When a bailiff learns that a debtor is a patient at a mental illness hospital he refers the matter to his manager so that guidance can be sought from the district judge as to what action, if any, should be taken. No written guidelines have been issued about either the service of documents or enforcing warrants in such circumstances. The existing procedure for service is set out in order 10 rule 4 of the County Court Rules 1981, which provides that, in the case of a mental patient, documents should be served on the person (if any) who is authorised under part VII of the Mental Health Act 1983 to conduct proceedings on the patient's behalf. If there is no such person authorised, documents should be served on the person with whom the patient resides or in whose care the patient is.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Jackson: There has been no use of private detective firms by my Department in the last five years.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Community Care Grants

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for (a) community care grants and (b) budgeting loans there have been in Northern Ireland from April 1991 to the latest available date; and of these how many he has (i) granted and (ii) refused.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. Wylie to Mr. William Ross, dated 18 November 1992:

As I am now responsible for social security operational matters your recent Parliamentary Question about Social Fund applications for Community Care Grants and Budgeting Loans has been passed to me for reply.

Information about the number of applications for Community Care Grants and Budgeting Loans from April 1991 is available in the Library under Social Fund Data and this is updated on a monthly basis. The details derived from this data are as follows:

From 1 April 1991 to 31 October 1992	Number of applications	Number awarded	Number refused
Community Care Grants	126,886	46,201	80,685
Budgeting Loans	154,590	92,086	62,504

I hope you find this information helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and copies will be placed in the Library.

Holding Centres

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now name the independent commissioner for Castlereagh and other holding centres in Northern Ireland, and publish the codes of practice and terms of reference for the commissioner.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I hope to be in a position soon to announce the appointment of the independent commissioner for the holding centres. The commissioner's terms of reference will be published at the same time.

The draft codes of practice covering the detention, treatment, questioning and identification of those detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Act will be issued for public consultation shortly, with a view to laying them before Parliament as early as possible in the new year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost, to date, of providing corporate dress within the Benefits Agency (a) nationally and (b) in Wakefield.

Mr. Burt: The provision of corporate dress is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 19 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the cost, nationally and in Wakefield, of providing corporate dress within the Benefits Agency.

Corporate clothing, as part of the customer service initiative, enables local Benefits Agency staff to present a better and more professional image to their customers. This clothing is worn, voluntarily, by front-line staff such as receptionists, Social Fund officers and those members of staff running exhibitions and talks for outside bodies.

The corporate dress contract was awarded on 11 December 1991. The national cost of corporate dress ordered to date is almost £1·4 million. I should explain that funding for this clothing comes from office running costs, and not out of the budgets allocated to benefits.

The cost of corporate dress in the Agency's Wakefield District, which comprises offices at Wakefield, Castleford, Hemsworth, Pontefract and a full time caller office at Normanton, is approximately £12,100.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency "Have Your Say" leaflets were (a) published and (b) completed; and if information from analysis of completed leaflets is included in the national customer survey for 1992.

Mr. Burt: The provision of service to customers is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 19 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many Benefits Agency "Have Your Say" leaflets were (a) published and (b) completed; and if information from analysis of completed leaflets is included in the National Customer Survey for 1992.

The "Have Your Say" leaflet provides a simple and effective method for customers to set out grievances. There have been two editions of this leaflet. 450,000 of the first edition were printed. The revised version is larger in size and has an altered design. Since April 1992 15,000 have been printed.

Information about the number of "Have Your Say" leaflets completed is not kept centrally and is therefore not available except at disproportionate cost. I should explain that the leaflet is designed to be used locally by customers and to enable Districts to respond to the points made and identify any local trends. As there is no national analysis, no statistics relating to it will be included in the National Customer Survey for 1992.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the production and distribution costs for the 1991-92 Benefits Agency annual report.

Mr. Burt: The 1991-92 Benefits Agency business plan is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 19 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the Publication of the Benefits Agency's Annual Report for 1991-92.

Ten thousand (10,000) copies of the Annual Report have been produced at a cost of £13,200. So far 3,500 copies have been distributed both within the Department of Social Security and to outside organisations. The cost of external distribution to date is £1,687. All the above costs are exclusive of VAT.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will undertake an inquiry into cases of special rules disability living allowance applications where payment was not made within six months of the application.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 19 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if an inquiry into cases of Special Rules Disability Living Allowance applications where payment was not made within six months of the application would be undertaken.

I have introduced several measures in the Benefits Agency to deal with the numbers of outstanding claims under normal and special rules and I detailed these in my letter to all MPs on 19 October.

The Agency has recently been considering a revision of procedures for processing of Special Rules cases. A number of recommendations have been made which will ensure that processing times are improved and that claims are dealt with consistently. Revised procedures have been written and will be issued shortly. Extended delays will not normally then occur.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for loans or grants under the social fund were made in his Newcastle office in the first six months of 1992, compared to the similar period in 1991; and what was the percentage of refusals in each case.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 19 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund applications and refusals in Newcastle.

In the first six months of the financial year 1991-92, 9,704 applications for Social Fund loans were made at Newcastle District, of which 36 per cent. were refused. Of the 4,926 community care grant (CCG) applications made in the same period, 75 per cent. were refused. In the first six months of 1992-93, 37 per cent. of the 11,686 loan applications made at Newcastle District were refused as were 75 per cent. of the 5,912 CCG applications.

I should explain that most CCG refusals are because the basic eligibility conditions are not satisfied. Nationally, in the year 1991-92, 86 per cent. of CCG refusals were because the basic eligibility criteria, such as receipt of Income Support, were not satisfied. The number of CCG and loan awards in Newcastle District made since April 1992 is over 25 per cent. higher than for the same period last year.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

European Court

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 77, if he will provide more information regarding the case currently before the European Court of Justice referred to in the answer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Details of the case (C-328/91) are in the Official Journal of the European Communities, dated 11 February 1992, a copy of which is in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmon Stocks

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now invite his advisory committee on salmon stocks to discuss with the National Rivers Authority how best to monitor the impact of the north east drift net fishery on salmon stocks under the proposed new Net Limitation Order.

Mr. Curry: We have no plans to ask the salmon advisory committee to do this. The National Rivers Autority is responsible for the management and monitoring of the drift net fisheries off the north east coast of England.

EMPLOYMENT

Discrimination

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on Government policy in relation to employers discriminating on the ground of age.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 19 November 1992.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will arrange for public telephone facilities to be made available at the premises of industrial tribunals.

Mr. McLoughlin: Public telephones are provided in the majority of industrial tribunal offices. Where they are not, the tribunal staff arrange access to an official telephone for parties, their representatives or witnesses if they need this in connection with the tribunal hearing. The central offices of the industrial tribunals in England and Wales and Scotland have been asked to review the arrangements with a view to ensuring that the public have access to a telephone.

Wages Inspections

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Eltham of 13 November, Official Report, column 984, on rates of low payment found by wages inspectors, if she will list the levels of low payment for which prosecutions have taken place, or are in progress, for 1991-92.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1991 there were 14 prosecutions for failing to pay at least the statutory minimum rate. The hourly rates of payment discovered in these cases are as follows:

£1·25; £1·50; £1·50; £1·63; £1·85; £1·875; £2·01; £2·18; £2·33; £2·33; £2·48; £2·48; £2·48; £2·50.

In 1992 there have been 10 prosecutions to date for failing to pay at least the statutory minimum rate. The hourly rates of payment discovered in these cases are as follows:

£1·70; £1·87; £2·00; £2·00; £2·00; £2·30; £2·60; £2·64; £2·68; £2·70.

There are three cases currently in progress, that have yet to come to court. The hourly rates of payment in these cases are as follows:

£1·60; £1·70; £2·03.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many wages inspectors there were in (a) 1979 and (b) 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: The average number of wages inspectors in post was as follows:

1990— 66 inspectors

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of firms covered by the wages councils received a visit from the wages inspectors in 1990-91.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1990-91, 4·4 per cent. of establishments covered by wages councils were visited by wages inspectors.

Equal Opportunities

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the recommendations made by the Equal Opportunities Commission to strengthen the equal pay and sex discrimination Acts.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Equal Opportunities Commission's recommendations for changes to the sex discrimination and equal pay legislation are receiving careful consideration by the Department.

Head Protection Regulations

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will grant exemption from the compulsory wearing of head protection on the lines of the Construction (Head Protection) Regulations 1989, to turban-wearing Sikhs in the non-construction industries to be covered by proposed legislation discussed in the consultative document CD38 issued by the Health and Safety Commission.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to arrange for a general exemption for turban-wearing followers of the Sikh religion from the requirement to wear head protection in the proposed regulations to implement the European directive on the Use of Personal Protective Equipment at Work.

EDUCATION

Assisted Places

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he intends to take further to promote the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Forth: The scheme is receiving wide publicity in the parents charter, copies of which have been made available to all parents. The publication from next year of tables showing the comparative performance of all local schools, including independent schools, will also bring to the attention of parents everywhere the excellent results achieved by assisted places schools, among others. The Department also distributes 175,000 leaflets a year explaining the benefits of the scheme to parents. Schools offering assisted places are best placed to promote the scheme in their area and they are continuing to do so with excellent results. Take-up of new assisted places is at record levels and the scheme is now more popular than ever with parents.

Appointments (Women)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many women would need to be appointed to meet his Department's plans to have 50 per cent. of appointments to bodies concerned with school matters and 30 per cent. of those to non-school bodies to be women by 1996.

Mr. Forman: It is difficult to give accurate figures since overall total membership of our public bodies is subject to change. Assuming that the overall membership of the Department's public bodies remains until 1996 at the level indicated in the document "Public Appointments and Equal Opportunities" recently released through the Cabinet Office, we shall have to appoint 23 more women to bodies concerned with school matters and 25 more women to non-school bodies in order to achieve our published goals.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list his Department's bodies concerned with school matters and non-school bodies; and if he will list the number of women, and the total number of members, appointed to each body.

Mr. Forman: The details requested are as follows:

Public Bodies concerned with school matters

Name of body	Number of women	Total number of members
Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges	4	16

Lunchtime Supervisors

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of lunchtime supervisors employed by each local education authority for 1980, 1985 and 1990.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Pupils (Exclusions)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to ensure that (a) proper records are kept on exclusions of pupils from schools and (b) reliable data are available on an annual basis for both indefinite and permanent exclusion of pupils from schools.

Mr. Forth: The Department has been collecting information on permanent exclusions from LEA and grant-maintained schools over a two-year period starting with the summer term 1990 under the national exclusions reporting system (NERS). The purpose of NERS is to provide a basis on which to review the working of the existing statutory procedures on exclusions. The information received is currently being analysed. The need for any further monitoring will be considered in the context of the overall review.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

The Solicitor-General: The records of the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, the Crown prosecution service and the Serious Fraud Office do not disclose any use of inquiry agents in the last five years. The litigation division of the Treasury Solicitor's Department makes frequent use of inquiry agents to ascertain the addresses of parties against whom court proceedings are to be issued, and as process servers. It would not be possible to ascertain the exact level of use or cost, or the names of all firms involved without disproportionate expense. However, the cost for each case usually does not exceed £100.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Satellite TV (Encryption Services)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will refer the monopoly of encryption services in satellite television to the Office of Fair Trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No. The Director General of Fair Trading is required under statute to keep the operation of commercial services in the United Kingdom under review. Allegations of abuses of market power are usually made directly by those affected to the Office of Fair Trading.

Compulsory Repair Orders

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress his Department has made with the compulsory repairs order issued on Buxton crescent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 19 November 1992]: Contacts between English Heritage and the owners are continuing. Meanwhile, my officials are making final preparations for the service of a repairs notice.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Albania

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been provided to Albania (a) through the know-how fund and (b) otherwise.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund was extended to Albania in July 1992. We are currently working up a programme of assistance: initial projects are concentrating on the privatisation of state farms and the health management sector. We have provided £1·3 million of bilateral humanitarian assistance through grants to British non-governmental organisations. Our contribution to EC humanitarian assistance is some £12 million.

Rhinoceros Conservation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much is currently allocated by her Department towards the world-wide conservation of rhinoceros.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is no sectoral allocation for rhinoceros conservation within the aid programme.

In 1991-92 we spent £100,000 on a project specifically related to rhinoceros conservation in Kenya and more than £1 million on projects designed to promote the conservation of areas where the rhinoceros is found.

Bosnia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many lorries for use in carrying humanitarian relief in Bosnia have arrived in Bosnia to date; how many more lorries from the United Kingdom are to be sent; and what representations have been made for more lorries to be made available.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees office in Zagreb stated on 18 October that they had a trucking capacity of 110 trucks and were expecting a further 126 vehicles to arrive by mid-late November. Of the vehicles in operation at the time of the report, we had provided 21 trucks with a total capacity of 231 tonnes. Since then we have provided 10 more trucks with trailers to increase their carrying capacity, to enhance UNHCR's operations, and a further 12 trucks, with 10 trailers, left Felixstowe yesterday, carrying around £1 million of medical supplies destined for the World Health Organisation, to join the distribution operation. We have received no representations from UNHCR to make more vehicles available.

Global Environmental Assistance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has of the consequences of the projected cut in global environmental assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 18 November 1992]: There is no projected cut. The planned provision for global environmental assistance covers only expected expenditure to meet existing commitments to the global environment facility and the Montreal protocol fund. We have agreed to provide new and additional resources for replenishment of the global environment facility. We shall make provision when the level and the timing of our contribution to the replenishment are known.

Aid Target

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effect of the Overseas Development Administration budget announced in the autumn statement on the achievement of the UN target of 0·7 per cent. of gross national product for overseas aid budgets.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 18 November 1992]: Performance against the 0·7 per cent. target is based on actual expenditure and by calendar year. It is not useful, therefore, for the Government to make forecasts of future aid/GNP ratios based on planning figures by financial year.

Aid Reductions

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will explain the reasons behind the proposed reduction in aid for developing countries from 1993-94 to 1995-96.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 18 November 1992]: The future levels of the aid programme have been considered, along with other public expenditure programmes, during the public expenditure survey. The public expenditure survey allows for a detailed consideration of all public expenditure priorities against the available resources. The results of this year's survey, announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 12 November, reflect the Government's firm commitment to a continuing substantial aid programme for developing countries. The aid programme to developing countries is planned to increase from 1992-93 to 1993-94 by 1 per cent. in real terms to £1,900 million and to be maintained at that level in cash in 1994-95 and 1995-96.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Banknotes

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been prosecuted for forgery of banknotes during each of the past five years for which records are available.

Mr. Jack: Data collected centrally does not distinguish between offences involving coins or notes. The table shows the number of prosecutions for forgery of coins and notes from 1986 to 1990. Provisional 1991 data will be available before the end of 1992.

Number of persons prosecuted in England and Wales under the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 Sections 14 to 19.

Year	Prosecutions
1986	314
1987	195
1988	99
1989	67
1990	169

Voting

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many expatriate votes were cast at the last general election; and how they were distributed by constituency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details of the number of overseas electors registered in each constituency were published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in 1992 Electoral Statistics (EL no. 19), a copy of which is in the Library. Information on the number of proxies who voted on behalf of overseas electors at the general election is not collected centrally.

Staff Vetting

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests were received by police authorities in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, from local authority education departments seeking vetting of prospective staff working with children for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Exact figures are not available but during the period 1 September 1990 to 31 August 1991 519,325 checks were made by police forces in England and Wales under the child protection arrangements, of which 192,410 were known to have come from local authority education departments. Corresponding figures for the two previous years were 489,266 (193,526) to 31 August 1990 and 464,112 (189,304) to 31 August 1989.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time the Metropolitan police take to process a police check on the suitability of local authority job applicants who work with children, such as teachers and social workers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The average length of time is currently 12½ weeks, including 9½ weeks waiting time before work on applications can begin. There has been a 42 per cent. increase in the number of criminal record check requests made to the Metropolitan police this year compared with last. Figures for the three months ending mid-November 1992 show an increase of 75 per cent. over the same period last year. Six extra staff have been loaned to the unit in an effort to reduce the backlog.

Drugs (Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison inmates at each of the London prisons have been put on report for being in possession of drugs during the period 1 January to 1 November.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of inmates held in London prisons placed on report for being in possession of drugs between 1 January and 1 November 1992 is as follows:

	Number
Belmarsh	69
Brixton	51
Holloway	58
Pentonville	72
Wandsworth	226
Wormwood Scrubs	120

Strangeways Prison

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will apply the transfer of undertakings regulations to the market testing of Strangeways prison; if he will make a statement on the advice provided in his Department's market testing guidelines; and if he will outline the considerations leading to his decision.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The applications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to market testing in the prison service is a complex matter which we are currently considering. I will write to the hon. Member when conclusions have been reached.

Private Security Firms

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what monitoring his Department carries out of the employment policies of private security firms.

Mr. Jack: We are supporting the development of self-regulation within the private security industry. As part of this policy we encourage adherence to the relevant British Standards covering technical and managerial competence.

On 20 October my right hon. and learned Friend attended the launch of the inspectorate of the security industry, which will inspect guarding firms against these standards. Inspection will not be compulsory, but British Standards provide the industry's users with a benchmark for deciding whether firms are suitable.

Police (Sick Leave)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officer work days are lost in each year since 1987 in each police authority (a) due to injuries incurred on duty and (b) other sickness.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Figures relating to the total number of days absent from duty due to sickness as a result of assault on duty, and other sickness, are published each year in the annual report of Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary. The corresponding totals on a force by force basis between 1987 and 1989 are not totally readily available. Those for 1990 and 1991 are as follows:

Police (Structure and Funding)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which organisations he intends to consult on any proposals for changes in the arrangements for the structure and funding of police authorities and police forces in England and Wales;

(2) when he proposes to make an announcement on the future arrangements for the structure and funding of police authorities and police forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We will consult on our proposals as soon as we have completed our consideration of these issues. Our consultations will include the Association of Chief Police Officers and the local authority associations.

Prisoners

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted or remand category inmates from prisons have been transferred to each of the special hospitals in each of the past five years; and how many of these were category A prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 6 November 1992]: The available information is given in the table.

Health and Safety

Mr. John McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy in the Library of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the agencies concerned: the Forensic Science Service, the United Kingdom Passport Agency and the Fire Service College. I have asked the chief executive of each of these agencies to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Hayzelden to Mr. John McAllion, dated 12 November 1992:

The Home Secretary has asked me to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the health and safety policy of the United Kingdom Passport Agency. We give a very high priority to health and safety matters in the Passport Agency and we have separate statements to cover each of the buildings that we occupy. I have arranged for a copy of these documents to be placed in the Library of the House.

Letter from A. Salisbury to Mr. John McAllion, dated 16 November 1992:

The Secretary of State for the Home Department has asked the chief executives of the executive agencies for which he is responsible to write to you directly in response to your Parliamentary Question about health and safety policies. I am replying as the Deputy Commandant of the Fire Service College agency on behalf of the Chief Executive, Mr. Brian Fuller, who is currently abroad on business.

A copy of the College's existing health and safety policy will be placed in the Library of the House. The policy is currently under review in the light of new health and safety at work regulations which will be coming into force at the beginning of 1993 and which are required in order to implement European Community directives on health and safety at work.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executives' replies to written Parliamentary Questions will be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Letter from J. Thompson to Mr. John McAllion, dated 17 November 1992:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question asking for a copy of the Health and Safety Policy of each of the agencies to be placed in the Library. As you know, the arrangement now is that the Chief Executive of an Executive Agency, with the agreement of the Minister, replies to Members of Parliament on operational matters. I am therefore replying on behalf of the Forensic Science Service (FSS).

A copy of the current health and safety policy has been placed in the Library as you requested. You will see from the introduction that the policy continues to operate within the overall umbrella of the Home Office Health and Safety Policy. The document represents a second level policy statement, operating within the 3 tier Home Office policy. Third level local policy documents for each laboratory set out the local application of the policy and procedures.

TRANSPORT

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend announced proposals for the privatisation of DVOIT on 19 October, Official Report, column 209. A consultation document on the future of the vehicle inspectorate was published on 14 September; it invited comments by 30 November on options for the future of the agency's testing activities. As part of the normal three year reviews of the framework documents for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, the Driving Standards Agency and the Vehicle Certification Agency, which need to be completed by 1 April 1993, we shall be looking at the alternative options. in accordance with the procedures for agencies described in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Office of Public Service and Science on 17 November, Official Report, column 104.

Fires on Ships

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the details of fires on board ships investigated by his Department for each of the last 10 years, giving details of (a) temperature and (b) length of fire.

Mr. Norris: A list of investigations carried out into fires on board vessels since the establishment of the marine accident investigation branch in July 1989 is attached.

It is not generally practicable to measure the temperature of a fire, and the statistics maintained do not include details of duration.

The information on all investigations into fires carried out by the Department between mid-1982 and mid-1989 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Merchant Ships

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents world wide involving United Kingdom registered merchant vessels over 100 gross tonnes were reported in 1991.

Mr. Norris: A total of 140 accidents were recorded.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account he has taken of the effect of hydrocarbon fuels and lengths of journey on ship fire safety standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Ship safety standards, including fire safety standards relating to the carriage and use of hydrocarbon fuels, are prescribed in the international convention for the safety of life at sea (SOLAS) for ships engaged on international voyages, both long and short. Those standards, together with similarly appropriate standards for ships not engaged on international voyages, are implemented by merchant shipping legislation.

Passenger Ferries

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) collisions, (b) collisions leading to capsize, (c) floodings and (d) serious fires involving United Kingdom registered passenger ferries have been recorded in each year since 30 April 1988.

Mr. Norris: Information on incidents broken down by the specified categories is only available in statistical form for vessels over 100 grt from 1 January 1989 grouped under related accident types; statistics for part years could not be produced without considerable effort. The figures concern all United Kingdom passenger ships and all ro-ro vessels including those which do not carry passengers; and they are not confined to serious accidents but include all cases where material damage was caused:

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish a Government survey to evaluate the possibility of a United Kingdom-wide concessionary fare scheme for pensioners on public transport.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to change the present arrangements for concessionary fares schemes operated by local authorities. Both British Rail and long-distance coach operators have their own commercial travel concessions for elderly people. There is therefore no need to carry out a survey as suggested by the hon. Member.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Beadall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the time scale of the construction of the Jubilee line extension in the light of the statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 12 November.

Mr. Norris: We shall be able to give the go-ahead for construction only when a formal agreement is concluded with the administrators on the detailed terms upon which they are to contribute to the cost of the extension. Thereafter, the line is planned to be built in 53 months.

Shipping and Seamen (Records)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the standards of record maintenance and the help given to academic and other inquirers by the General Register and Record Office of Shipping and Seamen.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend is aware that there have been few complaints about the standard of record keeping and a steady flow of expressions of appreciation about the services provided. We shall want to ensure that this continues in the future.

Parking

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to give powers to local authorities to deal with vehicles which are illegally, obstructively or dangerously parked; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Under the Road Traffic Act 1991 local authorities are able to assume responsibility for all permitted parking controls throughout their areas on application to us. They can also apply to have special parking areas designated in which they will be able to enforce virtually all parking restrictions. While the police will retain powers to enforce endorsable offences such as obstruction and dangerous parking, local authorities will in practice be able to deal with the vehicle concerned if it is also parked in contravention of a parking regulation.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether the difficulties associated with the lighting and stability of safety buoys, in the vicinity of the Kyle of Lochalsh/Kyleakin crossing, relevant to the construction work on the bridge to Skye, breach the original conditions of consent; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that the safety provisions at the Kyle of Lochalsh/Kyleakin crossing, relevant to the construction work on the bridge to Skye, are satisfactory with specific regard to the lighting and stability of surface buoys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The consent to the Skye bridge works, issued by the Department of Transport under section 34 of the Coast Protection Act 1949, requires the works to be marked and lit as specified by the Northern Lighthouse Board. The consent also provides for the broadcast of natigational warnings to mariners and for the use of guardships in connection with any emergency arising from the works including the displacement of buoys and the failure of lights. The contractors are also required to advise the hydrographer of the Navy of any hazard to navigation arising from the works.

Technically, any failure of navigational safety equipment represents a breach of the conditions of consent. On the occasions when the Northern Lighthouse Board has reported failures of navigational equipment. The Department of Transport has contacted the contractors and ensured that immediate action was taken to correct the failure. At the Department's request, the contractors are taking steps to ensure that problems with the navigational aids are minimised, including the replacement of the existing battery powered lights with solar powered buoys.

Coastal and Short Sea Shipping

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will be taking to develop British coastal and short sea shipping; and what discussions he has had with the National Union of Marine, Aviation and Shipping Transport Officer.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 17 November 1992]: It is primarily for the industry to develop coastal and short sea freight services in response to market demands. However, the Government are keen to encourage the use of waterborne freight alternatives where this is both economically and geographically viable.

We meet with officials from NUMAST periodically when we discuss a whole range of issues.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what initiatives he is planning to assess the potential for shifting freight away from roads and on to coastal ships and other vessels.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 17 November 1992]: I refer the hon. member to the answer that I gave on 3 November 1992, Official Report, c. 159-60.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made on the relative energy efficiency of coastal and short sea trips in terms of energy consumption per tonne per mile in comparison with freight-carrying road lorries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The energy efficiency of ships and lorries is discussed in a report produced by the Department of Energy in 1989 on "Energy Use and Energy Efficiency in UK Transport up to the year 2010" and published by HMSO.

I have no current plans to carry out any further assessement of the comparative energy efficiency of roads and wateborne freight.

WALES

Birds of Prey (Poisoning)

Mr. Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many protected birds of prey have been found poisoned in Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will indicate numbers of poisonings according to bird species and type.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

1987—None
1988—1 buzzard
1989—4 buzzards, 6 red kites
1990—2 buzzards
1991—2 buzzards, 1 red kite, 1 peregrine falcon
1992—To date 1 buzzard and 3 red kites

NHS Administration

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what percentage of South Glamorgan health authority's budget is spent on administrative costs not directly related to the provision of health care;

(2) what percentage of national health service Wales' overall budget is spent on administrative costs not directly related to the provision of health care.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All NHS expenditure in Wales is related to the provision of health and personal social services. The information necessary to identify administrative costs across all fields of health and social care is not available centrally. However, provisional annual accounts data for 1991-92 does yield for district health authorities the proportion of the authority's own revenue expenditure on administrative costs not directly related to the provision of health care during the last financial year. This figure for South Glamorgan is 3·3 per cent. and is taken to be that covering authority administration and purchasing expenses and expenditure on administering "other services"—for example, emergency bed service, registration and inspection of nursing homes, and joint finance expenditure, care in the community and grants to voluntary bodies. It excludes any further administrative expenditure accounted for within the small surplus on trading attributable to the non-ambulance services of the South Glamorgan health authority's common services units which cannot be allocated centrally between the various clients of those units.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science on 17 November, at column 104.

Appointments

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 30 October, Official Report, columns 866-908, if he will list the number of days per week that each appointee is expected, or contracted, to serve in respect of his or her appointment.

Mr. David Hunt: As the information requested is some 30 pages in length, I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Wages Councils

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning Government proposals to abolish wages councils.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received around a dozen representations, from members of the public who are not in favour of the proposal.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many men and how many women are in employment in each wages council industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available in the format requested.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated net effect on unemployment in Wales of the proposed abolition of wages councils.

Mr. David Hunt: By reducing barriers to employment, as well as reducing unnecessary bureaucracy, the abolition of wages councils will improve job prospects in Wales.

Agricultural Wages Board

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated net effect on employment in agriculture in Wales of abolishing the Agricultural Wages Board.

Mr. David Hunt: There is no proposal to abolish this board.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on abolishing the Agricultural Wages Board.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received no such representations.

Recycling

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales that plan to (a) fulfill and (b) exceed Government targets for local authority recycling of 25 per cent. of all household waste by 2000.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information will not be available until local authorities have finalised their waste recycling plans.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a cash-incentive scheme for local authorities in Wales to (a) invest in recycling collections, (b) raise the costs of landfill and (c) build up the markets for recycled materials.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government are investigating the possible use of economic instruments to provide incentives to increase, re-use, recycle or minimum waste. Our White Paper, "This Common Inheritance—The Second Year Report" commits us to announcing conclusions about the use of economic instruments early in the new year.

Landfill Gas Explosions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many properties have been destroyed by explosions caused by landfill gas in Wales; and how many people have been killed or injured in such explosions in each year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities are responsible for controlling landfill sites under planning and waste management legislation. Information relating to landfill gas should be available from the relevant local authority.

Shellfish

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all shellfish fisheries in Wales, indicating the type and number of shellfish collected in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will indicate which shellfish fisheries are classified in categories A, B, C and D.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Data on fish catches are compiled by port of landing. The 1991 figures for cockles and mussels are as follows:

		(tonnes)
Port	Cockles	Mussels
Conwy	—	100
Penclawdd	816	—

Conservation Sites

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many special protection areas and Ramsar sites there are in Wales; and what assessment he has made of the number of such sites which are threatened by developments associated with (a) industry, (b) recreation, (c) tourism, (d) roads, (e) minerals and (f) agricultural reclamation and flood prevention.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In Wales there are eight special protection areas—SPAs—designated under the EC birds directive and six sites designated under the convention on wetlands of international importance, the Ramsar convention. These figures include two sites which are both SPAs and Ramsar sites, one of which is also a cross-border site with England. I am not aware of any developments which would be in danger of destroying the value of any of these sites.

Public Record Office

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), Official Report, 13 November, columns 990-91, if he will set out in the Official Report why each document was withdrawn from the Public Record Office.

Mr. David Hunt: The documents concerned are required for routine administrative purposes.

Teachers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local education authorities in Wales who currently run disability awareness training programmes for their teachers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is not available. However, all local education authorities in Wales receive support from the Welsh Office under the grants for educational support and training programme for the training of teachers of the deaf, the blind, children with severe learning difficulties and designated special needs teachers in ordinary schools.

Farm Buildings

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many successful applications have been made to convert farm buildings into second homes in each local authority area of Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Small Schools

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how future standard spending assessments will affect small schools currently enjoying protection under the formula; what steps are being taken to base the formula on an objective and professional assessment of Wales's needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Standard spending assessments for Welsh authorities are not hypothecated to individual services. The distribution formulae for county authority SSAs take into account the effect of population sparsity in the provision of primary and secondary education. The formulae are reviewed annually with the local authority associations and ratified by the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance.

Caesium-137

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what inquiries have been made by his Department into the loss of a Caesium-137 source by British Coal from the Marine colliery.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The loss of a caesium-137 source from Marine colliery came to light during an investigation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in the second half of 1991, into British Coal's registered holdings of radioactive materials at their sites in Wales. HMIP required the company to comply with a condition in their certificate of registration under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, to take all reasonably practicable measures to recover the source, but it was not found. British Coal was subsequently fined a total of £20,000.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those agencies in his Departments which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 17 November, at column 104. The procedure outlined in that reply will, of course, apply to the three executive agencies for which I am responsible—the Royal Mint, launched 2 April 1990, the Valuation Office, launched 30 September 1991, and the Central Statistical Office, launched 19 November 1991. An announcement about the future status of each agency will be made at the appropriate time.

Officials (Resignations)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officials at principal level and above have resigned from the Treasury in the last two years who have joined the private sector financial services sector.

Mr. Nelson: Since November 1990, there have been four officials at grade 7 level and above who have resigned from the Treasury and have informed the Department that they would be joining the private sector financial services sector.

Small Firms (Loans)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of money lent by clearing banks to small firms at interest rates linked to a base rate subject to a minimum level independent of base rate; and how many small firms currently have loans of this type.

Mr. Nelson: I have not made any such estimate. But it is one fact of bank practice which the Bank of England will cover in the study I have asked it to carry out.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will meet the chairmen of the clearing banks to urge them to amend their loan agreements so that small firms receive the full benefit of a reduction in the official base rate.

Mr. Nelson: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer told the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee at its hearing on 16 November, he plans to meet the bank chairmen when he has the total opportunity. In the meantime, as the hon. Member will be aware, National Westminster bank reduced its minimum interest rate for commercial customers from 8 to 6 per cent. on 11 November. Barclays bank reduced its floor from 7 to 6 per cent. on 13 November.

Autumn Statement

Mr. Jack Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumptions and calculations underlie the projection used in the Autumn Statement for capital receipts from the sale of local authorities' assets (a) in aggregate and (b) for each local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The projection in paragraph 2.36 of the Autumn Statement is on a United Kingdom basis. It was based as usual on information about local authorities' recent asset sales and forecast outturn in the current year, taking account of the expected effect of the receipts measure announced in the Autumn Statement and of past experience in forecasting receipts. The Government have made no projections of asset sales at the level of individual local authorities.

Royal Family (Taxation)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the members of the royal family who are not liable to personal taxation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lamont: Her Majesty the Queen, though the Prince of Wales's income from the Duchy of Cornwall is also exempt.

EC Budget Council

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting of the European Community's Budget Council.

Sir John Cope: The Budget Council met in Brussels on 16 November. As President of the Council, I chaired the meeting. The Council rejected most of the European Parliament's amendments and modifications to its first reading draft budget, establishing a second reading draft budget for 1993 totalling 65,863 mecu—£53,735 million[1] —in commitment appropriations, compared with the total after the first reading of 65,704 mecu—£53,605 million. This represents an increase over 1992 of 3·06 per cent. against a Commission bid of 8·4 per cent. and the Parliament's proposed 9·8 per cent. Payment appropriations represent 1·08 per cent. of Community GNP, compared to a ceiling of 1·2 per cent. in the own resources decisions, leaving a cash margin of around 6·735 billion ecu—£5·5 billion.

The negotiations on the 1993 budget will continue and the Council has confirmed its intention to agree a complete budget on time in December. The budget will, therefore, need to give budgetary effect to decisions to be taken at the Edinburgh European Council on the Delors II proposals; and, in particular, to fulfil the political commitment to set up a cohesion fund early in 1993.

The European Parliament will consider the draft budget at its plenary session in December. The Parliament is expected to vote on the 1993 budget on 17 December, which if accepted would be formally adopted later in the month to take effect from 1 January.

[1] Converted at the rate of £1 = 1·2257 ecu, the rate notified in the Official Journal as prevailing on the last working day of last month (30 October).

Privatised Companies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the auction of part of the Government's holding of privatised companies' debt and loan stock.

Mr. Dorrell: I am pleased to report that the auction was successfully completed on 20 November when the Treasury accepted bids totalling £1·337 billion for the redemption or sale of the following series of electricity and BT bonds:

	£ million	per cent.	series
BT	150	12·25	2000
BT	170	12·25	2002
BT	180	12·25	2003
PowerGen	150	11·869	2005
Scottish Hydro-Electric	116	11·457	2001
Scottish Power	142	11·856	2005
BT	229	12·25	2006

Payment, with accrued interest, will be made to the Exchequer on 15 December 1992. The costs of the auction are expected to amount to some £0·5 million or less than 0·04 per cent. of proceeds. The proceeds will contribute towards the target of £8 billion privatisation proceeds for 1992-93 announced first in the 1991 autumn statement.

I am satisfied that the auction has secured good value for the taxpayer.

Aggregates (Definitions)

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to alter the definition of public expenditure and Government borrowing as currently used by the Treasury.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 18 November 1992]: I have no plans to change from the present definitions of these aggregates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 19 November 1992]: I am not aware of any.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his policy to release information on all of the meetings that considered the export of defence equipment to Iraq at any part of their proceedings, including details of the persons present; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had with his NATO counterparts relating to the exports of British defence equipment to Iraq.

Mr. Aitken: There have been general discussions between my Department and the defence departments of some NATO allies on the question of Iraqi military procurement.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what weight was given in assessing the acceptability, in relation to his Ministry's responsibilities, of applications for export of goods to Iraq of that country's use of chemical weapons.

Mr. Aitken: This was one of the factors taken into account in the application of the guidelines governing exports to Iraq.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what precautions were taken by his Ministry to ensure that British military secrets were not revealed to the Iraqi Government as a result of the export of British goods that could be used to manufacture munitions or other types of military equipment.

Mr. Aitken: Equipment and technologies with a security classification are invariably subject to particularly close assessment before their export is permitted.

Gulf War

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the weapons and equipment that were confiscated by allied forces during the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No comprehensive record was kept of the large quantities of Iraqi equipment captured by the allies during the Gulf conflict.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated cost to the United Kingdom of the Gulf war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current estimate of the cost of military involvement in the Gulf conflict, spread over several years, is around £2·5 billion. The bulk of the costs are offset by generous cash contributions from other Governments totalling some £2 billion.

Iran

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the (a) meetings with representatives of the Iranian Government and (b) visits to Iran by (i) Ministers and (ii) officials from his Department since 1985 giving the date, location, subjects discussed and names of individuals involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: This information is not held centrally. I will write to the hon. Member.

Pay Statistics

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amount of money was spent on the pay of (a) civilians in his Department, (b) armed forces personnel covered by the pay review body and (c) armed forces personnel covered by the Top Salaries Review Body in 1991-92; and what are the corresponding estimates for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested for 1991-92 and 1992-93 is:

(a) Civilian pay[1]	2,708	[2]2,776
(b) Armed forces personnel covered by the pay review body	5,208	5,317
(c) Armed forces personnel covered by the top salaries review body	11	12

[2] Excludes 1992-93 redundancy costs which are borne on civilian pay sub-heads.

Plans for 1993-94 are still under consideration. Detailed figures will be available when the 1993-94 Supply Estimates are published.

Service Personnel

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the figures for the proportion of service personnel leaving by premature voluntary release for the different categories of personnel for each year since 1989-90, and also the most recent figures available for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The proportions of officers and non-commissioned personnel (male and female) in each of the three services leaving by premature voluntary release in each of the years since 1989-90 are as follows:

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent by Ministers in his Department on official entertainment in the year 1991-92.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the final figure for his Department's expenditure on official entertainment in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State has written to the hon. Member today.

ENVIRONMENT

Superstore, Greenwich

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he is satisfied that the public interest requires a public inquiry into superstore plans in Eltham, London SE9;

(2) when a decision has to be made by him as to whether to call in or to have an inquiry or to allow the breaking of covenants and the granting of development permission at Well Hall, London SE9;

(3) when he expects to receive conclusions by the inspector hearing objections to the proposal by the London borough of Greenwich to grant planning permission for a superstore in exchange for £4 million;

(4) when the London borough of Greenwich advised his Department that they no longer objected to a superstore at Well Hall, London SE9.

Mr. Baldry: The London borough of Greenwich referred to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State on 4 November one planning application for a superstore at Well Hall. He has until 29 November to consider whether or not to call in for a public inquiry, but a power is available to the Secretary of State to extend the time. I understand that another application, for a superstore at Shooter's hill, will also be referred to the Secretary of State if the London borough of Greenwich resolves to grant planning permission. If the Secretary of State decides to cause public inquiries to be held, we expect to receive the inspector's conclusions when the report has been completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received (a) in favour and (b) opposing the proposal by the London borough of Greenwich to determine the applications on Well Hall playing field, London SE9.

Mr. Baldry: Of 74 representations to my right hon. and learned Friend, all but two have opposed the proposed superstore development.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for the London residuary body.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the formal wind-up of the London residuary body.

Mr. Robin Squire: The timing of the wind-up of the London residuary body will depend on progress with the disposal of the County Hall site.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of (a) the emoluments received and (b) the hours worked by each board member of the London residuary body in 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: As at 1 April 1992 the salaries and the time inputs of the chairman and members of the London residuary body were as follows:

Mr. Robin Squire: The provision of appropriate support for the chairman is a matter for the London residuary body.

Playing Fields

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what circumstances local councils are permitted to accept cash for lifting covenants against development of playing fields.

Mr. Baldry: An authoritative answer to the question can be given only by the courts. The general powers of local authorities to dispose of their interests in land do not extend to removal of binding covenants, except in relation to open space which is former public trust land, i.e. land held in trust for enjoyment by the public in accordance with section 164 of the Public Health Act 1875 or section 10 of the Open Spaces Act 1906. The Lands Tribunal may, however, modify or discharge covenants under section 84 of the Law of Property Act 1925. The Audit Commission may be asked to investigate alleged irregularities in local authority land transactions. The Secretary of State, however, has no jurisdiction.

Battersea Power Station

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the former Battersea power station was last inspected on his behalf.

Mr. Baldry: The building was last inspected by English Heritage on Wednesday 7 October.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he expects to publish the draft of the new "Minerals Planning Guidance on Opencast Mining."

Mr. Baldry: We hope to be in a position to issue draft revised guidance for public consultation following the outcome of the recently announced coal review.

Council Tax

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each region the number of households in each of the council tax property bands.

Mr. Redwood: The number of dwellings in each council tax band in each region shown in advance valuation lists sent to billing authorities on 28 August 1992, is given in the table.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 16 November to the hon. Member for Ealing North, Official Report, column 56, what significant changes to a property between 1 April 1991 and April 1993 will be ground for a change in a council tax valuation; what changes in value of the property will be ground for such a change; and what publicity has been given by Ministers to these provisions.

Mr. Howard: The banding of each dwelling shown in a valuation list compiled on 1 April 1993 will be based on its estimated sale price on 1 April 1991, but reflecting its size, layout and character and the physical state of its locality on 31 March 1993. Any change in the dwelling's size, layout and character or in the physical state of its locality which occurs after it has been banded but before 1 April 1993 may therefore be reflected by a change in the banding.

These principles are illustrated on page three of the booklet, "Council Tax—a guide to the new tax for local government", a copy of which has been sent to each household, and on page 6 of the booklet on valuation and banding, which is available to householders on request.

County Hall, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current situation in respect of the disposal of County Hall, London SE1.

Mr. Robin Squire: The agreement between the London residuary body and the Shirayama Company provides for the sale of the riverside building to be completed in October 1993. The residuary body is pursuing the question of the disposal of the remainder of the County Hall site in accordance with its statutory responsibilities.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each county council in England the total amount of unapplied capital receipts.

Mr. Robin Squire [pursuant to the answer given on 5 November 1992, Official Report, column 371]: The total usable receipts for each county council in England as at 31 March 1992 are shown in the table.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each housing authority in England the amount of unapplied capital receipts from (a) housing sales and (b) other capital sales.

Mr. Robin Squire [pursuant to his reply, 5 November 1992, c. 371]: I have arranged for the revised information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Separate figures for housing receipts and other capital receipts are not available.

SCOTLAND

Self-governing Hospital Trusts

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if self-governing hospital trusts are exempt from compulsory competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Government's position on market testing is set out in the White Paper, "Competing for Quality", and trusts have been asked to take account of this. The Government will be monitoring the position to ensure that the benefits of obtaining best value for money are realised in order to improve patient care.

Superannuation Division

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to establish the superannuation division of the Scottish Office as an executive agency.

Mr. Lang: I announced on 6 March, Official Report, col. 335, that under the Next Steps initiative the Scottish Office superannuation division was to be designated an executive agency. I have now decided that the change in status should take effect from the start of the next financial year, on 1 April 1993. The agency will be known as the Scottish Office Pensions Agency (SOPA). Following open competition Mr. Norman MacLeod, currently head of the Scottish Office superannuation division, has been appointed chief executive of the new agency.

HCFC22

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what quantity of HCFC22 is purchased by his Department per annum.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 November 1992]: The information required could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an undertaking to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain chlorofluorocarbons or hydrochlorofluorocarbons for his Department.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 November 1992]: The Scottish Office will purchase fridges which do not contain CFCs or HCFCs when they are available in the market place and provided that they offer good value for money.

PRIME MINISTER

Libya

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on what Libya has done to comply with Security Council resolutions 731 and 748 and Her Majesty's Government's policy to bring Libya to compliance.

The Prime Minister: It is our policy that Libya should implement in full the two SCRs to which the hon. Member has referred. Neither we nor the other co-sponsors of the resolution in question, France, and the United States, will be satisfied with less. Unfortunately, I cannot report more than limited success at this stage.

During the summer the Libyan authorities closed, and in some cases dismantled, many of the camps previously used to house or train terrorists. They have also given us information on their links with the Provisional Irish Republican Army which we believe may prove useful. We welcome both these developments as steps towards demonstrating that Libya has renounced terrorism called for in SCR 731 and 748.

But the Libyans must take further steps in order to comply fully with those resolutions. In particular, it is necessary for them to surrender for trial in Scotland or the United States the two accused of responsibility for the Lockerbie bombing and for them to satisfy the French demands for co-operation on the investigation into the UTA bombing. Libya can be sure that a trial in Scotland will be fair, and in accordance with normal Scottish procedures, including trial by jury. If the Libyans convince us that they have decided to surrender the two suspects, then we would be willing to meet them to discuss the mechanics of handing them over.

We have no hidden agenda, and we are not seeking to use this issue to undermine the regime in Libya. But it is now a year since the warrants for the two accused of Lockerbie were issued. There can be no question of any relaxation of United Nations sanctions, complete or in part, until Libya has surrendered the two accused of Lockerbie and satisfied French requirements on UTA. If they do, this situation will be transformed. If they do not, the consequences for Libya are bound to be increasingly serious.

Iraq (Exports)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the letter, reference 000399, dated 20 June 1990, from the principal private secretary to the noble Lord, Lord Ridley, then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, to the private secretary to the chairman of Customs and Excise, under the heading "Exports to Iraq" which was copied to him as Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the previous letter, reference 000395, copies of which have been sent to him.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 November 1992]: The first document to which the hon. Member refers relates to consultations between Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the Department of Trade and Industry prior to a fact-finding visit by Customs officers to the premises of Matrix Churchill. A reply from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to the Department of Trade and Industry dated 22 June 1990 made it clear that decisions about any follow-up action would rest with the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in accordance with their statutory responsibilities. These documents were copied to my Private Secretary in the Treasury. Treasury records do not reveal whether I saw this correspondence, but I have no recollection of having done so. The then Paymaster General was responsible in the first instance for matters involving Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

The second document is an internal submission dated 14 June 1990 to the right hon. Lord Ridley, then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, concerning the implications of the visit by customs officers to Matrix Churchill. It was not copied to other Ministers. It will be for Lord Justice Scott to consider the relevance of this document to the implementation of Government policy on the export of defence equipment to Iraq.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Nations special inspection commission investigating Iraqi chemical weapons production sites at Ramadi, Fallujah, Saad-16, Salman Pak, Muthanna and Samara, respectively, found any United Kingdom origin technology or chemicals at any of these sites.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Special Commission has provided information on United Kingdom supplied materials and equipment discovered in Iraq. Any evidence of breaches of export controls are urgently investigated, and if substantiated would be a matter for the courts.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed with the Government of India the current situation in Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last discussed the situation in Kashmir with the Indian Government during his visit to New Delhi on 15 to 18 January 1992. Ministers and officials have discussed Kashmir with the Indian authorities on a number of occasions since then.

China

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances he has received from the Chinese ambassador concerning the well-being and treatment of prisoners at the Lingyuan No. 2 labour reform detachment in Liaoning province of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Goodlad: None. We take every opportunity to put on record with the Chinese authorities our serious concerns about human rights, including the treatment of prisoners detained at the Lingyuan No. 2 labour reform detachment.

Hong Kong

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the consistency with the Basic Law of the proposals for democracy in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We and the Governor took full account of the provisions of the Joint Declaration and the Basic Law in developing the proposals that he announced on 7 October. We have pressed the Chinese side to change the Basic Law to allow for an increase in the number of directly-elected seats in the Legislative Council for 1995. In view of their position that this is not possible, the Governor has set out in parallel an alternative approach. That is the approach on which we are concentrating at present. We consider that the Governor's proposals are within the terms of the Basic Law.

Export Controls

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution his Department will make to the seminar planned by the Export Control Organisation on the practical guide to United Kingdom export controls.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Foreign Office officials regularly contribute to seminars organised by the Export Control Organisation on United Kingdom export controls. They will next do so on 1 December 1992.

Albania

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his latest estimates are for food supplies in Tirana; and what plans he has to provide food aid to Albania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An EC mission to Albania earlier this year estimated Albania's additional food needs until the autumn of 1993 at around US $84 million. In June, the EC agreed a food aid grant worth 45 mecu ($59 million). A further 40 mecu ($53 million) was subsequently approved in October.

South Africa

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 90, when he now expects to receive a further report from the South African Government on the agents mentioned.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have been kept fully abreast of the South African investigation as it proceeded. During his visit last weekend President de Klerk handed over a letter on this matter to the Prime Minister. This issue was also covered in their talks on 14 November.

Sarawak

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Malaysian Government to prevent further deforestation of the Sarawak region.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development held discussions on 15 May 1992 with a delegation led by the Malaysian Minister of Primary Industries, Dr. Lim Keng Yaik. The two Ministers signed a memorandum of understanding on co-operation for the conservation, management and development of forest resources, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

We have regular contact with the Malaysian Government on policies in this area as on many other issues. It is clear from these contacts that the Malaysians are very much aware of international concern about such matters.

The Sarawak state authorities have made a number of important undertakings to the International Tropical Timber Organisation (ITTO) Council. At a meeting in November 1991, they reaffirmed their commitment to sustainable forest management and declared their intention to reach sustainability before the year 2000. They also announced measures to bring extraction levels down within two years to those recommended by the 1990 ITTO mission led by Lord Cranbrook. We, like many other countries, consider this to be a welcome statement of intent.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Assisted Areas

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what additional funding for assisted areas status provision will be made available (a) for Barnsley, Doncaster and Mansfield and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Sainsbury: Assisted area status determines eligibility for Great Britain regional measures, primarily regional selective assistance. In all assisted areas spending on regional assistance depends upon the demand for the schemes and will be met from the schemes' agreed funding provision.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many delegations he has met arising from the assisted areas review;

(2) how many submissions he has received as a result of the assisted areas review.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 November 1992]: My ministerial colleagues and I have met 52 delegations and received 1,550 formal written responses to the assisted area map review public consultation document issued on 9 June 1992.

British Coal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost of directors' emoluments incurred by British Coal in each year since 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The total emoluments of the members of the corporation, including payments in kind and pensions to former members or their dependants, were as follows:

Year ending March	£
1987	647,495
1988	574,697
1989	657,955
1990	745,687
1991	819,742
1992	1,138,608

Clothing Quotas

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will promote discussions among clothing manufacturers about the possible advantages of extra import quotas under the outward-processed system from averaging the prices of home-produced and outward-processed clothing to make their United Kingdom production more price-competitive.

Mr. Needham: It is for the relevant trade associations to promote discussion among clothing manufacturers on the economic merits of outward processing trade. However, my Department has gone to great lengths to explain to individual manufacturers the procedures and rules governing this scheme and the benefits which can accrue to companies from its application.

Coal Review

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what terms of reference have been given to the consultants appointed to assist in the coal review which he announced on 26 October.

Mr. Heseltine: I announced on 26 October that it was my intention to appoint consultants to report on the prospects for British Coal, including any alternative markets that may exist for coal and to comment generally on the competitiveness of British Coal as an organisation.

Following evaluation of proposals from a number of companies invited to bid to undertake this work, CAminus Energy Ltd have been appointed to conduct a study of markets for coal, and Ernst and Young will be carrying out a study of the competitiveness of British Coal as an organisation.

Boyds have already begun work, starting their programme of pit visits on 5 February. Boyds will examine historical operating data, mine plans, coal reserves, and other relevant information supplied by British Coal Corporation to develop an independent assessment of the future production costs of each of the 21 pits at different potential levels of output, within the context of British Coal's operations.

Their conclusions will be based on an evaluation in respect of each mine of

(i) the available coal reserve base,
(ii) near-term capital requirements, and
(iii) estimated future potential operating costs and likely costs under current mine plans.

Boyds will also provide general technical consultancy to the DTI as required, including technical evaluation of evidence provided during the review period as necessary.

Caminus will examine the short-term and longer term markets for coal in the United Kingdom and elsewhere. They will consider the market opportunities available to British Coal both at its current prices and at lower prices, if these could be achieved, in the context of future energy markets more widely and of the likely future availability of energy supplies. Caminus will also, on request by DTI, examine the prospects for alternative new electricity generation options identified in the course of the review.

Ernst and Young will consider British Coal's organisations and cost structure and advise on possible improvements to British Coal's competitiveness which could be achieved through changes in this area. They will not consider the technical aspects of British Coal's work, nor the competitiveness of individual pits.

In addition to these studies, PIMS Associates Ltd have been appointed to provide an overview of British Coal's cost structure and productivity in relation to international comparators.

The conclusions of each of these studies will be published. I expect the reports to be available early in 1993.

I may wish to commission other studies in due course.

Iraq (Machine Tools)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list those companies that sought export licences for machine tools to Iraq between 1985 and 1991 which were wholly or partly owned by Iraqis; and what the equipment was for which the licences were applied;

(2) on what occasions and for what equipment export licences for machine tools for Iraq were granted between 1985 and 1991 after it was known that a licence for a similar product had been turned down by another country;

(3) if he will publish a list of export licences for machine tools granted to British companies for equipment destined directly or through a third country to Iraq between 1987 and 1991, stating the name of the company, the equipment concerned and its end use.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 November 1992]: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it has been the practice of successive Administrations not to disclose such information about individual export licences. However, I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the Minutes of Evidence to the Trade and Industry Select Committee, 26 November 1991, pages 37 to 106.

Arms Fairs

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy in future not to grant temporary export licences for equipment destined for such events as arms or other equipment fairs, without there being a definite guarantee that the equipment will be returned to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on the current procedures.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Applications for licences for temporary exports are considered on their merits. Licences for international exhibitions include legally binding conditions requiring the exporter at all times to retain sufficient control of the goods to ensure their safe return to the United Kingdom within a specified period.

Royal Ordnance

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licences were granted between 1987 and 1990 to Royal Ordnance for the export of strip propellant or other similar forms of propulsive material.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 November 1992]: It has been the practice of successive administrations not to reveal details of individual export licences which exporters submit in confidence to my Department.

HEALTH

Drug and Alcohol Services

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are currently receiving drug and alcohol services residentially in London; and what is the number of applicants for such a service.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of capital spending on hospital and community health services in each year since 1979-80 in (a) gross and (b) net terms, after deducting proceeds from land and asset sales (i) in cash terms, (ii) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator and (iii) adjusted using the hospital and community health services capital deflator.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the table. In addition, a net increase of £57 million was announced in the autumn statement—a cash increase of 3·1 per cent. over 1992-93.

Notes:

All figures have been adjusted to reflect the transfer of Public Health Laboratory Services from the HCHS to CHMS.

Figures in column A have been adjusted to reflect the transfer of the Family Health Service administration, the Family Health Services cash limited spending and the Disablement Services Authority partly to the HCHS and partly to CHMS, (and also take account of changes since 1990-91 relating to the NHS reforms). Figures in column B do not reflect these transfers and are therefore not comparable with those for later years.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of national health service staff employed in each region for each of the last three years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 9 November 1992]: The requested information is given in the table.

Ambulance Service Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) officers and (b) ambulance men and women were in post per thousand resident population in April 1992 in each regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The latest information available centrally is given in the table. The 1992 data will not be available until spring 1993.

Health Authority Debts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the regional health authorities which carried capital debts over into the 1992-93 financial year; and what was the size of the debt in each case.

Mr. Sackville: The format of the 1991-92 annual accounts of regional and district health authorities does not provide for the separate identification of year-end creditors relating to capital expenditure and such information is not otherwise collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairmen of regional health authorities for details. Capital creditors will be separately identifiable in the annual accounts from 1992-93.

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who in her Department has been appointed to oversee and develop green issues; how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in her Department.

Mr. Sackville: My noble Friend Baroness Cumberlege, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, is responsible for oversight of the Department's response to the Environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance".

A whole-time equivalent of some 7·8 officials have specific responsibilities for oversight and development of "green issues" within the Department; this includes matters such as energy and waste management and the Department's contribution to follow up the environment White Paper.

Insulin

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to arrange for an inquiry by the committee on the safety of medicines, or independently, into the safety of human insulin.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans at present to arrange for an independent inquiry into the safety of human insulin. The Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) has monitored closely adverse effects occurring with human insulins since their introduction and continues to do so. Concerns raised in relation to the safety of human insulins have been reviewed by CSM on several occasions.

Skin Cancer

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the current procedures for recording numbers of skin cancer cases in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The national cancer registration scheme in England and Wales records the incidence of cancers, including all skin cancers combined, and also separately for malignant melanoma and other skin cancers.

At the time of diagnosis, basic data, including individual patient identification, sex, age, permanent residence, site of the cancer, and date of diagnosis, are recorded and sent to regional cancer registries. Regional data are collected and published by the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys.

Information for Scotland, and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Cigarettes

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on how many new brands of cigarettes were launched in Britain in 1991-92; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have been informed of 35 new brands supplied in the United Kingdom in 1991-92, as required under section 9(2)(b) of the Tobacco Products Labelling (Safety) Regulations 1991.

Qa Business Services

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will offer financial assistance to the members of the former Qa Business Services similar to that given to civil servants transferred to TICC Ltd. on the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency;

(2) what representations she has received regarding compensation by her Department for deferred pensioners of the former Qa Business Services; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: A number of representations have been received citing financial assistance given to ex-employees of TICC Ltd. However, different circumstances led to the collapse of these companies and the ex gratia payments made in respect of TICC Ltd. does not set a precedent for similar payments to former employees of Qa Business Services.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Access to Children

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to improve the operation of access to children by their fathers where mothers and children have moved away from the area where the families lived before divorce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The law relating to access to children was comprehensively reformed in the Children Act 1989 and the Government have no current plans for further change. The arrangements enabling children to see a parent who lives in another area are primarily matters to be worked out by those concerned.

ACCOMMODATION AND WORKS COMMITTEE

Department of the Official Report

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee at what level the expenditure on (a) new carpets, (b) new lighting and (c) new desks and chairs was approved for the rooms occupied by the Department of the Official Report; what was the cost; and which company in which EC country was the manufacturer and supplier.

Mr. Ray Powell: Detailed operational responsibility for these matters lies with the Director of Works. I shall ask him to write to the hon. Member.

ADMINISTRATION COMMITTEE

Glasses

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will make a statement on the reasons for the purchase of French-made glasses for use in Standing Committee rooms.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms. I shall ask him to write to the hon. Member.

EDUCATION

School Governors

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the percentage of school governors nationally from the ethnic minorities.

Mr. Forth: A survey carried out by the National Foundation for Educational Research in 1990 found that just over 1 per cent. of school governors were from ethnic minority groups. A further survey is currently being carried out, the results of which should be available in March.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures he has taken to increase the percentage of school governors from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Forth: Throughout this year's "Schools Need Governors" campaign we have made clear that we would like people from the ethnic minorities to put themselves forward to be school governors. Our publicity leaflet and poster were translated into eight ethnic minority languages. Of the six individual governors featured in the leaflet, two were from the ethnic minorities.

Textiles and Home Economics

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what provisions will be made under the national curriculum to ensure that textiles and home economics will be taught.

Mr. Forth: Aspects of home economics are covered in a number of national curriculum subjects, including mathematics, science and technology. My right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales are currently considering the recommendations of the National Curriculum technology review group and will make a full statement when their joint proposals are published for consultation towards the end of the year. There are no changes proposed to the national curriculum mathematics or science orders.

School Field Trips

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of school field trips by local education authority for each year since 1985 and the number of pupils/students that have attended them; and what assessment he has made of the effects charges have had upon school field trips.

Mr. Forth: Information on the number of school trips and the number of pupils attending them is not collected centrally. The Government have, however, been monitoring the effects of the legislation on charging contained in the Education Reform Act 1988. A survey of schools undertaken by the National Foundation for Educational Research, published in 1991 showed that the law had not led to any significant change in the number of school field trips.

Language Teachers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the general availability of language teachers in the United Kingdom; and what measures he will take to increase their number.

Mr. Forth: For England and Wales, in January 1992 secondary schools reported that only 1·2 per cent.—162—of teaching posts in modern foreign languages were vacant.

A £1,500 tax-free bursary has been offered since 1990 to encourage graduates to undertake initial teacher training in modern foreign languages. Recruitment to such training rose in 1990 and 1991 by 30·3 per cent. and 35·2 per cent. respectively, and 1992 is expected to show a further increase.

Information in respect of Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

School Governors (Interviews)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will issue guidelines to school governors on interviewing practice in respect of interviewing disabled applicants.

Mr. Forth: No. Governor training is an LEA responsibility and most provide training on appointing staff, which will include interviewing skills.

Disabled People

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make it his policy to amend the draft medical questionnaire distributed to initial teacher trainees so as to reflect a more positive attitude to disablement and disabled people;

(2) if he will consult the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation in connection with the draft medical questionnaire sent out to prospective teachers;

(3) if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local education authorities to secure the retention of disabled teachers.

Mr. Forth: Officials from the Department have recently met representatives from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation to discuss these matters. Further representations from RADAR have been invited. I shall consider them carefully.

"Choice and Diversity"

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which teacher unions he or his Ministers met to discuss the White Paper "Choice and Diversity"; and which organisations otherwise representing teachers were consulted.

Mr. Forth: The main teacher unions and organisations representing teachers were invited to comment on the White Paper. Their comments along with close to 1,000 other responses received, were carefully considered. My noble Friend the Minister of State addressed a conference for the Professional Association of Teachers on the subject of the White Paper.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the criteria used to determine the spending levels on education for grant-maintained (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools; what was the total spending in each category for each of the last two years; and if he will divide these figures by region.

Mr. Forth: Grant-maintained schools receive the bulk of recurrent funding in annual maintenance grant—AMG. This is based on the levels of funding that schools could have expected to have received if still maintained by the relevant local education authority, including elements for spending on central services and school meals. The level of AMG for each school reflects spending decisions by individual local education authorities, from whom the grants are recouped.

Grant-maintained schools are eligible to receive transitional, special purpose and capital grants direct from the Department. The level of these grants is fixed each year, taking account of the level of funding schools need to meet their particular responsibilities as self-governing schools. Most of this funding is allocated on a simple formula basis with no differentiation between primary and secondary schools. Allocations for major capital projects are based on an assessment of school bids against a set of priorities notified to schools in advance.

Total spending on grant-maintained primary schools was nil in 1990-91 and £3 million in 1991-92. Total spending on grant-maintained secondary schools was £68 million in 1990-91 and £179 million in 1991-92. The table shows how these totals break down by region:

£ million

	1990-91	1991-92
	Secondary	Primary	Secondary
North	0·0	0·0	1·4
North West	11·7	0·4	14·0
Yorkshire and Humberside	2·3	0·1	7·3
West Midlands	7·5	0·0	18·8
East Midlands	9·2	1·2	21·1
East Anglia	0·5	0·8	2·3
South East	29·2	0·6	97·1
South West	8·1	0·0	16·6

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many letters of complaint he has received from parents in Nottinghamshire about the county council's approach to opt-out ballots.

Mr. Forth: Nottinghamshire county council has made plain its opposition to parents seeking grant-maintained status for their children's schools, including through letters to parents which may be misleading. The Department has not so far received letters of complaint from parents about the council's approach to ballots, though informal complaints are made through a number of channels including in correspondence with hon. Members.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his reply of 12 November, Official Report, column 893, what was the number of formal complaints made to his Department from parents alleging misconduct by a headteacher or a governing body during the holding of a parental ballot on grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what level of grant was given in 1991-92 to the Grant Maintained Schools Trust.

Mr. Forth: No grant has been given to the Grant Maintained Schools Trust. Grant of £600,000 was paid to the Grant Maintained Schools Centre in 1991-92.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his reply of 12 November, Official Report, column 893, how many formal complaints have been made to his Department from parents alleging misconduct by a local education authority during the holding of a parental ballot on grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The information is not available in the form requested.

Hearing-impaired Children

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps are currently being undertaken by his Department to encourage more young people to become qualified teachers of hearing-impaired children.

Mr. Forth: The Department assists local education authorities in England with the costs of training qualified teachers to become teachers of pupils with special educational needs. It does this through the grants for education support and training programme which supports the training of hearing-impaired pupils. The amount of LEA expenditure to be supported for this training is being raised from £7·2 million in 1992-93 to £10 million in 1993-94.

Police Vetting

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance has been issued during the past 12 months to local education authorities who because of staff shortages may need to employ persons not yet cleared by the established police vetting procedure.

Mr. Forth: None.

Rising-Fives

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those local education authorities in England and Wales which have a policy of once a year entry to school for rising five-year-olds; what entry procedures the remaining authorities employ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Information on Welsh practice is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales. The term "rising fives" usually relates to children who are still four at the outset of a school term but will reach five before the term is over. A policy of admitting "rising fives" is thus one involving termly admissions to primary school. This practice has been widespread in England for years. We are aware that, more recently, numbers of local education authorities have adopted, or moved towards, a single entry date at the start of the school year in which a child becomes five, but records of individual authorities' practices are not kept centrally.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance he gives to local education authorities about the timing of entry into schools of rising five-year-olds; and if he has any plans to change the current arrangements.

Mr. Forth: Local education authorities are required to secure that all children receive schooling from the start of the term following their fifth birthday. The admission of younger children is a matter for local discretion. My right hon. Friend has issued no guidance on the arrangements that might be made in this discretionary area and has no plans to do so.

Teacher Training

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what measures he is taking to ensure the viability of enlarged in-school initial training for teachers in small primary schools;

(2) what information he has received on the effect of his proposals for changes in teacher education for the primary sector on teacher supply.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has made no proposals for changes in the training of primary school teachers. He intends to introduce changes to primary training, to improve its quality by making it more school-based and more closely related to what schools will need to achieve the higher standards envisaged in "Choice and Diversity", by no later than September 1994.

Sandwich Courses

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will take steps to collect information in respect of students undertaking sandwich courses in higher education who are having difficulty in securing the required industrial placements.

Mr. Forman: I am aware of the difficulty higher education institutions are having at present in securing industrial placements for some of their sandwich course students. This is essentially a matter for the institutions themselves, in conjunction with employers.

Undergraduates (Fees)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total expenditure in respect of tuition fees for undergraduate courses in universities and polytechnics in the latest year for which figures are available; and how much of this was for students not qualifying for a mandatory maintenance grant on grounds of high parental income.

Mr. Forman: Tuition fee expenditure on mandatory awards for first degree students in universities, polytechnics and colleges in England and Wales was £680 million in the academic year 1990-91. Information on fee expenditure for students receiving a nil maintenance grant because of high parental or other income is not available. However, 27·4 per cent. of students in receipt of mandatory awards received nil maintenance.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out for each local education authority in rank order the expenditure on major discretionary awards per head of adult population for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forman: The available information is given in the table and excludes awards made to students by the London residuary body. Trafford and Isles of Scilly, included with Cornwall, made no full value awards.

Choice in Education

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what official contact Ministers and officials in his Department have had with Choice in Education in the last 12 months.

Mr. Forth: Officials from the Department meet representatives of Choice in Education from time to time. Choice in Education receives no grant from the Government.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what use the Church Commissioners have made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Michael Alison: The Commissioners have used private detectives over the last five years to trace and to serve legal documents on debtors. Information on the cost in each case is held on a case by case basis and the total cost is not, therefore, readily calculable. The firms involved are Andersons; Barrington Investigations; D-Tech; Finlay's Bureau of Investigations Ltd.; Lewis and Elliott; MacNab and Co; Madagans; M. J. Kane and Associates; Nicholas Linden and Pinkertons.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Goodlad: The scope for privatisation or contractorisation of Wilton Park and the Natural Resources Institute is considered as part of each agency's three-year review. The three-year review of the Natural Resources Institute is currently being undertaken. It will consider, inter alia, the strategic options.

Iran

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will lodge a formal complaint with the Iranian Government over recent breaches of human rights in Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The abuse of human rights in Iran continues to cause us deep concern. We have made this clear on many occasions, both bilaterally and together with our EC partners, and will continue to do so.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what United Kingdom origin equipment or material was found by the United Nations special inspection team in Iraq at (a) the Al-Musayyib high explosive test site, (b) the Al-Atheer facility for manufacture of implosion bomb detonation devices, (c) the Al-Furat centrifuge factory for uranium enrichment or (d) the Akaswat phosphate mine and uranium extraction plants.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence those monitoring the United Nations sanctions against Iraq found of United Kingdom-manufactured computer equipment playing any part in Iraqi nuclear, chemical or biological weapon plans.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware that the inspections in Iraq by the United Nations special commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency have revealed the names of many companies around the world which have traded with Iraq, including some from Britain. It is possible that more names will be revealed as time goes on. It is not our practice to comment in detail on the information given to us by the IAEA or UNSCOM.

Any evidence of wrongdoing will be urgently investigated and, if appropriate, will be a matter for the courts. However, it would be quite wrong to conclude, without further analysis, that the companies named have behaved wrongfully. Until the invasion of Kuwait, trade with Iraq was not illegal provided strategic export controls were not breached.

UNESCO

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent in monitoring the progress of UNESCO since the United Kingdom's withdrawal from membership.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It would involve disproportionate cost to detail all the costs incurred in following developments at UNESCO since 1985. The main charges are those of a first secretary in Paris and another in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, 50 per cent. of whose duties are devoted to UNESCO; and a locally-engaged member of staff in Paris. The estimated 1991-92 cost of these staff is £143,630.

Cambodia

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking towards curtailing the activities of armed Khmer Rouge in Cambodia in breach of the 1991 peace accord.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom has provided 120 personnel to the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia—UNTAC—military component, including military observers and a mine clearance training unit. We, together with our partners in the United Nations Security Council, will shortly be considering what steps should be taken in the light of the Khmer Rouge's refusal to co-operate with UNTAC.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to initiate legal or diplomatic action in relation to infringements by Pol Pot and the Khmer Rouge of international law.

Mr. Goodlad: No international criminal court now exists with jurisdiction over the offences in question. Under the terms of the Genocide convention, the only national courts with jurisdiction over Pol Pot would be those in Cambodia. If the new, legitimate Cambodian Government formed after elections next year wished to bring Pol Pot and his associates to trial, we would have no regrets.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy with regard to the continued participation of the Khmer Rouge in the peace process in Cambodia.

Mr. Goodlad: Our aim is to see the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict implemented fully. The United Nations Security Council will again be addressing this question shortly. If the Khmer Rouge exclude themselves from the free and fair elections due to take place in April/May 1993, that is their choice.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on compliance with the Cambodian peace accord of October 1991.

Mr. Goodlad: We deplore the refusal of the Khmer Rouge to cooperate with the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia—UNTAC—and to respect its obligations under the Paris agreements. There has been considerable progress towards the implementation of the comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict. Despite occasional ceasefire violations, peace has returned to most of Cambodia. More than 170,000 refugees formerly in the camps on the Thai-Cambodian border have returned to Cambodia without a single fatality as a result of mines; and preparations are well in hand for the holding of free and fair elections in April/May 1993, with more than 1·5 million Cambodians now registered.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each month from January 1991 the number of (a) visa applications, (b) successful visa applications and (c) unsuccessful visa applications made by citizens of each republic of the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Nationals of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia have required visas for the United Kingdom only since 7 November 1992. To obtain the information required for the period of 7 November to date would require a special exercise to consult all visa-issuing posts overseas and would result in disproportionate cost.

I will, however, ensure that the hon. Member receives the information he requires when it is to hand.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visa applications from citizens of each of the former Yugoslav republics have been refused on the ground that the applicant does not have leave of absence from an employer.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is not at present available. Such statistics are normally provided monthly by posts abroad: since the visa regime was not applied on former Yugoslavia until earlier this month, to obtain them now would involve disproportionate cost.

I will, however, ensure that the hon. Member receives the information he requires when it is to hand.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the fees charged to visa applicants from the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Visa applicants from the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia are required to pay the same fees as all other visa applicants. Current visa fees are listed in the Consular Fees Order 1989—SI (1989) 152—a copy of which is available in the Library.

Kurdish People

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his Turkish counterpart on the treatment of Kurds in north Kurdistan, and the denial of parliamentary rights to Kurdish Members of Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Turkish Government are well aware of our concern about the human rights situation in Turkey. We welcome Prime Minister Demirel's commitment to introducing further human rights reforms.

It is not the case that the parliamentary rights of any Members of the Turkish Grand National Assembly of Kurdish origin have been withdrawn. But the public prosecutor has requested the removal of parliamentary immunity from some members of the People's Labour Party—HEP—so that they can be tried for charges arising out of alleged co-operation with terrorist organisations. The request for removal of immunity is currently under review by the parliamentary justice committee.

The HEP members concerned are all of ethnic Kurdish origin. There is no question of lifting the immunity of other Kurdish members of the Grand National Assembly. We are following this issue closely.

Bosnia and Slovenia

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the posts in Bosnia and Slovenia where visa applications can be made for entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are none.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of visa applications that have been refused from Bosnian citizens who are (a) parents, (b) grandparents, (c) siblings and (d) other relatives of people in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is not at present available. Such statistics are normally provided monthly by posts abroad: since the visa regime was not applied to Bosnian citizens until earlier this month, to obtain them now would involve disproportionate cost.

I will, however, ensure that the hon. Member receives the information he requires when it is to hand.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Yugoslavia

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made with the provision of humanitarian assistance to the former Yugoslavia since the Birmingham summit.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Good progress has been made in a number of areas. We have now committed more than £70 million in humanitarian assistance to the former Yugoslavia: approximately £41 million as our share of the EC's relief programme and over £29·5 million bilaterally.

We have played a leading role in establishing the European Community task force, an initiative which stems from the Birmingham summit. We have been the first member state to provide trucks and staff—including the leader for the task force. As also envisaged at Birmingham, member states have now appointed special representatives to oversee their humanitarian assistance to the former Yugoslavia: they meet shortly under the chairmanship of the United Kingdom special representative, Tim Lankester, the Permanent Secretary of the Overseas Development Administration.

In the meantime, we have also gone forward with direct action mainly in central Bosnia where the suffering is greatest. There are now 43 British trucks together with trailers, support vehicles and maintenance back up working on relief convoys. There are 75 British civilian personnel working on the convoys or seconded as technical experts to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. They will be joined by another 20 construction workers this week who will work on a major shelter programme designed to make existing buildings weather proof for around 20,000 people this winter in some of the worst affected areas. This is in addition to our substantial financial support for UNHCR, the World Health Organisation, the Red Cross and other non-governmental organisations. It is also in addition to the cost of providing 2,400 British troops for the UN protection force.

Commonwealth

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will consider raising with the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth, and the member states, the possibility of an invitation to join the Commonwealth being extended to the Irish Republic, on the same basis enjoyed by other members of the Commonwealth that are republics.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. We do not intend to approach the Commonwealth Secretary-General or other Commonwealth members of this matter; it is for the Irish Republic to apply if it wishes.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much assistance was given by the United Kingdom to Somalia in each of the last 10 years (a) in humanitarian aid whether by cash grant or in kind, (b) in development aid whether by cash grant or in kind, (c) in loans and (d) in any other form.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table sets out figures showing United Kingdom gross bilateral development and humanitarian assistance to Somalia for each of the past 10 years. We have made no loans or given any other form of aid to Somalia during this period.

Somalia: United Kingdom bilateral aid

Chakufwa Chihana

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for an official from the United Kingdom mission in Malawi to attend the trial of Chakufwa Chihana on charges of sedition and publish a report of the proceedings.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Chakufwa Chihana's trail ended on 12 November. The judge has now withdrawn to consider the evidence. Members of the high commission staff together with representatives from other diplomatic embassies in Lilongwe took it in turns to ensure a continuous diplomatic presence at the trial. Transcripts of the proceeding are expected to be available through the high court in Blantyre. We do not propose to prepare an independent report of the proceedings.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government about the imprisonment and criminal charges brought against Chakufwa Chihana in Malawi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We made formal representations in April and August this year calling on the Malawian Government to release Mr. Chihana pending formal committal proceedings. We have told them that we considered his arrest and subsequent indictment to be a flagrant violation to his right to freedom of speech.

PRIME MINISTER

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what is his policy towards introducing comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation in favour of the rights of disabled people;

(2) what plans he has to prohibit discrimination on the ground of physical disability; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We continue to work to eliminate discrimination against disabled people on the ground of their disability. We believe that this is best achieved by a combination of legislation targeted on clearly identified needs and a programme of education and encouragement.

Additionality and Transparency

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the EC in the last three years in relation to the definition, interpretation or implementation of the principles of additionality and transparency; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There have been a number of discussions at ministerial and official level. An announcement was made by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 17 February. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry on 30 June at columns 525-26.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister how Her Majesty's Government currently define and interpret the principles of (a) additionality and (b) transparency in relation to EC funding; in which ways these differ from those used by each of the other member states; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Article 9 of regulation 4253/88 requires that the structural funds have an additional economic impact in the regions concerned; and result in at least an equivalent increase in the amount of official structural aid in the member state concerned. The Government fully support these principles, which are reflected in our public expenditure arrangements, details of which were set out in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry on 30 June.

How other member states interpret the additionality and transparency requirement is a matter for the member state concerned and the Commission.

Import and Export Control Act 1990

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what plans Her Majesty's Government have to bring forward legislation to amend the Import and Export Control Act 1990.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's Government have no plans to amend the Import and Export Control Act 1990 which repealed section 9(3) of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939. The Government intend, however, to introduce a new Export of Goods (Control) Order in the near future.

China

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his meeting with the Vice-Premier of the People's Republic of China.

The Prime Minister: My meeting with the Vice-Premier offered an important opportunity to reaffirm to the Chinese leadership the Government's strong support for the Governor's proposals for constitutional development in Hong Kong and to urge the Chinese to proceed through constructive discussion rather than confrontation. I also discussed commercial issues and human rights, including the visit of Lord Howe's delegation to China in December.

Iraq

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the cost of the inquiry by Lord Justice Scott into the sales of equipment to Iraq.

The Prime Minister: It is not possible at this stage to make such an assessment.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what specific measures have been taken to prevent the unauthorised removal, destruction of and tampering with all documents relating to the sale of arms and components to Iraq, held within Government Departments and elsewhere, which might be required by Lord Justice Scott's inquiry.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 November 1992]: Instructions have been issued to ensure that all papers relevant to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry are kept in safe custody and are made available to the inquiry when required.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about his response to firms other than Matrix Churchill about the conditions of arms sales to Iraq.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 November 1992]: Arms sales to Iraq were considered under Her Majesty's Government's guidelines for the sale of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq until August 1990, when the United Nations embargo on trade with Iraq, including all arms sales, came into effect.

European Central Bank

Mr. Darling: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to persuade his EC colleagues that the European central bank be situated in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have consistently drawn the attention of my EC colleagues to the advantages for the Community in establishing the new monetary institutions in the United Kingdom. I shall continue to do so.

Child Labour, Colombia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister when he will be in a position to reply to the letter of 26 October from the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby in respect of child labour in the Colombian coal mines.

The Prime Minister: I will respond to the hon. Member's letter shortly.

Militarily Sensitive Equipment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what armaments and military sensitive equipment, and in what quantity, were licensed by Her Majesty's Government for export to (a) Iraq and (b) Yugoslavia since 1979.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Details of export licence applications for Iraq were included in a Department of Trade and Industry memorandum supplied to the Trade and Industry Select Committee and published in the minutes of evidence, 26 November 1991, pages 37-106. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will write to the hon. Member about exports licensed for supply to Yugoslavia.

Party Conferences (Security)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what amounts have been claimed from central funds by each political party for security costs associated with conferences in each of the last three years.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Claims have been made only by the Conservative and Labour parties. The figures are as follows:

	Conservative party £	Labour party £
1989	274,500	70,500
1990	270,500	76,900
1991	330,000	90,500

On each occasion the expenditure was certified by the chief constable concerned as being necessary in the light of the assessed threat.

Drug and Alcohol Services

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister what review Ministers have made of the effects of the ending of Government funding for health education co-ordination and of ring fencing of funding for residential drug and alcohol services; and if he will review the working of the Cabinet sub-Committee on drugs misuse.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Support for drugs and health education has received specific grant funding for seven years and aspects of health education are now included in the national curriculum; schools and local education authorities now have a firm basis on which to build their provision for preventative health education.

The community care special transitional grant of £539 million in 1993-94 will ring fence resources for the whole of community care; within this local authorities will be expected to allocate an amount for alcohol and drug services appropriate to their needs.

The establishment of a special ministerial sub-committee reflects our firm commitment to tackling drugs misuse. We will continue to co-ordinate, and keep under review, our strategy in this area.

Staff References

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to provide new guidelines to all Welsh non-departmental public bodies concerning the obligation to insist on a minimum of two references from previous employers for all applicants for senior appointments and for each reference to be taken up and checked before any appointee commences employment; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Welsh non-departmental public bodies have been sent the "Practitioners Guide for Civil Service Recruitment" as guidance; it includes a range of pre-appointment checks to be undertaken before a permanent appointment is made. It is the responsibility of the individual bodies to decide on the most suitable processes for making these checks.

Ministerial Appointments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to amend paragraph 52 of the guidelines on public appointments set out in "Questions of Procedure" for Ministers so as to debar Ministers from appointing their own employees to be members of the boards of public bodies for which they are responsible.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 November 1992]: Under paragraph 52 of the guidelines set out in "Questions of Procedure", Ministers, having made such inquiries as they think appropriate, may, subject to public accountability and the requirements of the law, appoint those considered best qualified for each appointment. I have no plans to change the paragraph in question, which seems to me to be adequate and appropriate for its purpose.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Violent Crimes (Compensation)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the arrangements for compensating the victims of violent crimes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government are anxious to improve services to all victims of crime. For those seeking compensation under the criminal injuries compensation scheme we shall be making available an additional £180 million to meet compensation claims over the next three years. These resources are over and above the current substantial provision of £530 million. In addition we wish to improve and speed up the service to those making claims, especially in the light of the increasing volume of applications.

Some of the main barriers to progress in this area were outlined in last year's wide ranging management review of the CIB. Copies of the report entitled "Management Review of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board—Home Office Management Advisory Services with Capita Management Consultancy: June 1991", were placed in the Library of the House. Against that background and after careful consideration we have decided that a simplified procedure based on a tariff structure offers the best prospect of providing quicker payments to claimants through a means that is fair, straightforward and understandable.

Further work is needed to develop the practical aspects of these new arrangements. This work should be completed by the first half of next year when a White Paper will be published setting out the details of the proposed new arrangements. We would expect these to come into operation early in 1994.

Claims already lodged, and those submitted before the new tariff scheme takes effect, will be dealt with by the board under the existing arrangements.

Drug-related Offences

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests in connection with drugs-related offences were made in Blyth Valley in each year since 1981.

Mr. Jack: Information on arrests is not collected centrally. The table shows the number of prosecutions at Blyth Valley petty sessional division for drug-related offences from 1981 to 1991, which is provisional.

Prison Officers' Accommodation

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of prison officers working at each of the London prisons who are listed as waiting to be allocated a prison officer quarter.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since the introduction of the fresh start agreement in 1987, prison officers are not entitled to the provision of a prison service quarter. Consequently there are no records kept at any of the London prisons for officers waiting to be allocated a prison service quarter.

This is because when official quarters become available, they are advertised by the governor within the establishment. All applications are considered by him, and factors such as the length of service, seniority and compassionate grounds, are taken into account in making an allocation.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what survey has been undertaken by his Department as to how prison officers newly posted to work in London prisons find suitable affordable accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No survey has been undertaken by the prison service as to how prison officers newly posted to London prisons find suitable accommodation. Since fresh start, prison officers are no longer quarters entitled.

However, in recognition of the difficulties experienced by new prison officers, whose first posting, like that of other newly recruited civil servants, does not constitute a public expense transfer, officers who are purchasing property in high cost areas, and those posted to establishments in the south-east of England, including London, have since 1989 been able to claim up to £5,000 relocation expenses.

Officers who are transferred to London prisons on permanent compulsory transfer terms are entitled to reimbursement of the expenses incurred in moving home. If they own a property, its sale at the current market value is guaranteed through a Home Office scheme operated by the Black Horse Relocation Company. Financial assistance to officers transferring at public expense from a cheaper to a more expensive area and whose outgoings have necessarily increased is available in the form of additional housing cost allowance. Officers may apply for an advance of salary for house purchase which is repayable, free of interest, over a 10-year period.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total amount of revenue received by his Department from the sale of prison officers' quarters in England and Wales in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total amount of receipts from the sale of prison officers quarters in England and Wales in each of the past 10 years were as follows:

	Receipts £ million
1982-83	6·8
1983-84	16·1
1984-85	16·6
1985-86	11·1

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers' quarters have been purchased or built for prison officers (a) in Greater London and (b) in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The numbers of quarters built or purchased in each of the last 10 years were as follows:

Following the introduction of fresh start in 1987, prison officers were no longer entitled to quarters and quarters purchased since then have been for chaplains, farm managers and agricultural workers at the new prisons. The only quarters provided in the Greater London area were seven purchased for HM prison Belmarsh, Woolwich, in 1990-91.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of prison officers' quarters that have been sold in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total number of prison officers quarters sold in each of the last 10 years were as follows:

1982-83	463
1983-84	779

Prison Chaplains

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison chaplains were working within prisons in England and Wales on 16 November.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 16 November 1992 there were 397 chaplains working in prisons in England and Wales. These comprised:—

	Number

Full-time	109
Part-time	56
Methodist	129
Roman Catholic	103

In addition, the prison service employs 114 substitutes who stand in as required, when a full-time chaplain is on leave or undertaking training. 567 visiting ministers have also been appointed under section 10 of the Prison Act 1952 to meet the needs of prisoners of other faiths.

Genital Mutilation

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how may prosecutions were brought against medical practitioners who carried out illegal female genital mutilation operations in 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Jack: Records available centrally show no prosecutions in England and Wales from 1986 to 1991—provisional—under the Prohibition of Female Circumcision Act 1985.

Race Relations Act 1976

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposals from the Commission for Racial Equality for changes to the Race Relations Act 1976.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Commission for Racial Equality has put forward wide-ranging recommendations in its second review of the Race Relations Act 1976. The Government are now giving these careful consideration.

Prison Officers (Assaults)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults on prison officers took place between June and November; and at what prisons they occurred.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information relates to offences of assault and attempted assault on a prison officer which were punished under the prison discipline system and is given in the table. Data for offences punished in October and November are not yet available.

Mr. Jack: The available information is for offences recorded by the police and is given in the tables. It is not possible to separate offences of unauthorised taking from thefts of a motor vehicle.

Gambling

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on stimulating the demand for gambling.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is the Government's policy that the demand for gambling should not be unduly encouraged, because of the damage it can cause if taken to excess. This principle is applied in different degrees to different forms of gambling. The greater the scope for abuse and commercial exploitation the more rigorously it is applied.

Bail

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-United Kingdom (a) men and (b) women were granted bail and how many remanded in custody for each of the last five years; and of those, how many were from (i) Nigeria, (ii) other West African countries, (iii) Colombia and (iv) Pakistan.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The nationality of persons remanded on bail is not recorded centrally. Information for prisoners remanded into prison service establishments in each of the years 1989-91 is given in the table. Data for earlier years are not readily available.

Prison Education Services

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will make the decision to award a contract for prison education services after tenders have been submitted; and what is his policy in respect of treating each prison on a case by case basis.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The contracts for the provision of education services to inmates in prisons in England and Wales from 1 April 1993 will be let between the Secretary of State for the Home Department and the successful tenderers. As with other contracts of this value, the responsible organisation—in this case, the prison service—will make recommendations to the Home Office procurement unit. Decisions on which contractor to recommend will be made in the operational line by the governor, or, if appropriate, by the responsible area manager, operational director or by the director-general.

In each case, the governor has prepared a specification of the educational services which the prison or young offender institution will require. Some contracts may be let for individual prisons on the recommendation of the governor. In other cases, tenderers are bidding to provide educational services for a number of prisons. In these circumstances, recommendations will be made at the appropriate operational level to accept those bids which represent the best combination of quality and price to meet the needs of the prison service.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will reconsider the decision to put the prison education service out to competitive tender; and if he will make it his policy that the prison education service should continue to be provided by its current staff.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The present arrangements cannot be continued because of the changes in local education authorities' responsibilities for further education from 1 April 1993. Competition is the best means of ensuring quality and value for money in the future provision of education services to prisoners.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the report from the staff college at Coombe Lodge on the prison education service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 20 November 1992]: The staff college at Coombe Lodge was asked to provide advice to the prison service on the implications for the provision of education in prisons in England and Wales of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. The report contained commercially sensitive material and, in consequence, the prison service prepared and distributed widely in September 1992 a full summary of the report, together with comments on its findings. The text of the summary was agreed with the staff college and incorporated all of the report's principal recommendations. I am placing copies of this summary in the Library of the House.

Foreign Prisoners

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which section or officers in his Department have special responsibilities for policy matters regarding foreign prisoners.

Mr. Jack: The Home Office has a number of policy responsibilities which relate to foreign prisoners. The prison service has the primary responsibility for foreign national prisoners held here and the maintenance of their family ties, and co-ordinates the interests of other Departments of the Home Office; the criminal department has responsibility for extradition and for the policy relating to the repatriation of prisoners; and the immigration service has certain responsibilities for prisoners subject to a deportation order.

Deportation

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times he has used his power contained in section 46 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to authorise the early release of convicted deportees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: By 13 November, my right hon. and learned Friend, the Home Secretary had authorised the early release of 93 convicted deportees.

Racial Equality Councils

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racial equality councils have had funding withdrawn in the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In this financial year funding has been withdawn by the Commission for Racial Equality from two racial equality councils, Gravesham and Birmingham, after effectiveness reviews. A third, Oldham, has been given notice that its funding will also be withdrawn following a similar review.

As I explained in my letter to the hon. Member of 16 November last, although funded by grant in aid by the Home Office, the Commission for Racial Equality is an independent statutory body, and it would not be appropriate for me to comment on decisions in individual cases such as these.

Holloway Prison

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available resources to build the new visitors' centre at Her Majesty's prison Holloway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A visitors centre at Her Majesty's prison Holloway is being considered for a place in the 1995-96 major capital works building programme.

Prisoner Transfers

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the report of the interdepartmental review of the provisions governing the transfer of prisoners between United kingdom jurisdictions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have considered the report of this review in consultation with my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and the Secretary of State for Scotland. A copy of the report is being placed in the Library; copies are also being sent to interested organisations.

We have decided to accept in full the report's recommendations, including the need to consider how the existing legislation might be amended to overcome the present obstacles to the permanent transfer to Northern Ireland of prisoners who have their family links there but who have been convicted of serious offences in Great Britain. In the meantime we shall implement the recommendation that greater use should be made of temporary transfers, usually for extended periods, and that the criteria for considering requests should be amended.

In future, any request by a prisoner in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland to be transferred to one of the other jurisdictions either permanently, to serve the rest of his or her sentence, or temporarily to foster family ties, will normally be approved, provided that (1) the prisoner would have at least six months left to serve in the receiving jurisdiction before his or her date of release at the time of making the request; (2) the prisoner was ordinarily resident in the receiving jurisdiction prior to the current sentence; or his or her close family currently reside there and there are reasonable grounds for believing that it is the prisoner's firm intention to take up residence there on release or to receive visits and (3) both Departments concerned are reasonably satisfied that the prisoner will not, if transferred, disrupt or attempt to disrupt any prison establishment, or otherwise pose an unacceptable risk to security. A request that does not meet these conditions may nevertheless be granted where there are strong compassionate or other compelling grounds for transfer.

A permanent transfer may however be refused if it is considered that the prisoner's crimes were so serious as to make it inappropriate that he or she should benefit from a substantial reduction in time left to serve, if that would be a consequence of transfer.

Requests will continue to be considered on an individual basis. To facilitate the orderly movement of small numbers of prisoners between jurisdictions, the timing of each transfer will be subject to operational and security considerations in the sentencing and receiving jurisdictions.

Temporary transfer, where granted, may be for a period of up to 12 months, with requests for extension of this period considered on a similar basis. Temporarily transferred prisoners will be expected to comply fully with such regime requirements as the receiving Secretary of State may stipulate. Failure to agree to do so either in making the request or after transfer will normally justify refusal of the request or the immediate return of the prisoner to the sentencing jurisdiction.

My colleagues and I hope that the extended use of temporary transfer will help to alleviate the difficulties experienced by families in visiting prisoners in other jurisdictions.

Drug Offences

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing, for each police force area in England and Wales, the number of notifiable drug offences in (a) 1979-80, (b) 1985-86, (c) 1990-91 and (d) 1991-92 and the percentage increase between 1979-80 and 1991-92, between 1985-86 and 1991-92 and between 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 November 1992]: The figures given in the tables are for offences of trafficking in controlled drugs which is the only drug-related offence which is notifiable. These figures were not collected separately until 1983 so it is not possible to provide any information for earlier years.

Murder Charges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were charged with murder or attempted murder in each of the last five years; of those, how many were granted bail; and of those granted bail (a) how many were male and how many female, (b) how many were white and (c) how many were from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 November 1992]: Information on the number of people charged is not collected centrally. Reliable information about the breakdown of remands into bail and custody according to offence is also not available centrally. The information that is collected does not include ethnic origin data.

The table shows the number of people prosecuted for the offences of murder and attempted murder from 1987 to 1991, provisional.

Birmingham Six

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent reports he has had from the Director of Public Prosecutions into further forensic examination by West Midlands police of evidence used in the case of the Birmingham six.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The West Midlands police are continuing the reinvestigation announced on 20 March 1991 into the bombings which occurred in Birmingham on 21 November 1974. Some of the original exhibits have been submitted for further scientific examination. The Director of Public Prosecutions is being kept informed of the progress of the reinvestigation; it is her policy not to make public information gathered during the course of current criminal investigations.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest year available, how many persons were removed by the police under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983 to a place of safety in England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: During the year ending 31 March 1990—the latest information held centrally—1,032 persons were removed from a public place by the police to a place of safety under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

WALES

Local Government Reform

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish his White Paper on Welsh local government reform.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the proposed (a) timetable for and (b) boundaries of local government reorganisation in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my statement on 3 March 1992, at column 171.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place the result of consultation on local government reform in Wales in the Library.

Mr. David Hunt: I have already placed copies of responses to my statement of 3 March 1992, together with advice submitted to the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government, in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Welsh local authorities, their respective associations and others in relation to his latest proposals for the boundaries of proposed unitary local authorities.

Mr. David Hunt: Copies of responses to my statement of 3 March 1992, together with advice submitted to the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government, are already in the Library of the House.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 17 November, Official Report, column 145, if he will itemise in full the financial details of the changes in local government functions for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: The adjustments to the 1993-94 provisional local government revenue settlement for Wales to reflect changes in local authority functions are as follows:

	£ million
School inspection responsibilities transferring to the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector (Wales)	−0·9
Further and residual higher education responsibilities transferring to the Further Education Funding Council (Wales) and Higher Education Funding Council (Wales) respectively	−125·2

Farmers (Diversification Grants)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been allocated by his Department in diversification grants to farmers in Wales in each of the last five years; and how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time jobs have been created as a direct result of such diversification grants.

Mr. David Hunt: The grant paid since the inception of the scheme is as follows:

It is estimated that the projects will create 182·5 new jobs. Information is not available on the breakdown between full-time and part-time jobs.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the present financial situation of each of the proposed health trusts and the expected situation at the end of the financial year; and what measures the new trusts intend to take to maintain their financial viability and service position.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department does not, as a matter of routine, receive information about the financial position of individual district health authority-managed units at the level of detail requested. However, one of the key criteria for NHS trust status is financial soundness; and the financial position of applicants was therefore considered carefully prior to my right hon. Friend's recent decision to establish a further 13 NHS trusts in Wales with an operational date of 1 April 1993. In the meantime, the respective health authorities retain full responsibility for the proper financial management of the units concerned.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what system of communication he has in place with the recently announced health trusts to ensure that no problems arise in the transition out of health authority administration with regard to the level of patient treatment and financial viability.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Officials will continue to maintain close contact with the newly established NHS trusts which become formally operational on 1 April 1993. In the meantime, the respective health authorities retain responsibility for financial management and patient care services.

Hospitals

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the possible closure of (a) St. Mary's day hospital, Llandough, (b) the West 2 ward at Llandough hospital and (c) Powys ward at Sully hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Business Development Centre

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 17 November, Official Report, column 144-45, if he will ensure that the new business development centre will be self-financing and not require any public subsidy.

Mr. David Hunt: The business development centre will include, inter alia, accommodation for staff from the Welsh Development Agency and from the North East Wales training and enterprise council to provide a range of services to businesses in the area. Some services will be provided as part of Government support for business and training and changes will be levied for other services.

Teacher Training

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the report of the All-Wales Forum on Teacher Training for the National Curriculum in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have today published the report of the forum entitled "Strategy for In-Service Teacher Training in Wales". I am grateful to the forum for its work and have accepted its advice in full. A copy of the report is being sent to all those involved in the in-service training of teachers in Wales and I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House. I will be taking a keen interest in the action taken on the report recommendations.

The forum has recommended working group arrangements to take forward its work on the exchange of ideas and co-ordination of proposals for in-service training. The work of the forum advisory group is therefore complete and it has been dissolved.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Regional Growth

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the average annual regional growth rates by standard region for the period 1979 to the present date.

Mr. Portillo: The information is not available in the form requested. Growth rates are normally calculated on the basis of estimates of gross domestic product at constant prices, but regional GDP figures are calculated only at current prices since there are no regional price deflators available.

The November 1991 edition of "Economic Trends" contained the latest estimates of regional GDP for the years 1980-90, and estimates for earlier years are available from the House of Commons Library.

Quotas

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the United Kingdom has subscribed the increase in its quota with the International Monetary Fund under its ninth general review of quotas.

Mr. Nelson: Yes. The ninth quota review recommended an increase in the United Kingdom quota from 6,194·0 million to 7,414·6 million special drawing rights, as part of a general increase in quotas to allow the IMF to continue its essential work in assisting countries with balance of payments problems, particularly in the developing world and, increasingly now, eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, to undertake economic adjustment to contribute both to their own growth and to the successful functioning of the international monetary system.

The quota increases under this review have been delayed for some time, but the United Kingdom was one of the first countries to vote in favour of them, in 1990. The subscription of an extra 1,220·6 million special drawing rights to the United Kingdom quota, in accordance with the International Monetary Fund (Increase in Subscription) Order 1990, has today been paid from the National Loans Fund. Subscribing a quota increase to the IMF is not public expenditure. The transactions result in a credit position with the IMF as part of our reserves.

Group Relief

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria the Inland Revenue applies when deciding whether to accept a late claim for group relief.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue has applied criteria set out in a reply given by the then Financial Secretary on 10 December 1985 at column 592. These criteria covered both claims for group relief and elections for continuation treatment on a change in partnership. This has given rise to some uncertainty in practice. From today, a late claim for group relief will be accepted where it can be shown that:

—the Inland Revenue contributed materially to the failure to submit a timely claim, for example by misleading the claimant and failing to rectify the error before the statutory time limit expired; or —for reasons beyond his or her control, for example due to a debilitating illness, a person vitally concerned in the making of a claim was not available at a crucial time; or

—for reasons beyond the claimant company's control or its agent's control, the need for the claim could not have been perceived before the time limit expired.

In each case, a claim will only be accepted where it can be shown that, although late, it was made as soon as reasonably possible in all the circumstances. A late claim will not be accepted where the delay is attributable to:

—oversight or negligence on the part of a claimant company or its agent; or —failure, without good reason, to compute the necessary figure; or —the desire to avoid commitment pending clarification of the effects of making a claim.

A claimant company wishing to have a late claim considered under these guidelines should apply to the inspector of taxes dealing with its affairs as soon as reasonably possible in the circumstances.

Late Elections

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the circumstances in which the Board of Inland Revenue will be prepared to consider accepting late elections under the provisions of section 113(2) of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988.

Mr. Dorrell: As explained in the reply given by the then Financial Secretary on 10 December 1985, at column 592, in cases where no statutory discretion is given to the Board of Inland Revenue to extend a time limit for a claim or election, it must be assumed that Parliament's intention is that the limit should be applied strictly. The number of cases in which it would be appropriate to exercise discretion under the board's powers of care and management, provided in the Taxes Management Act 1970, is correspondingly limited.

Every such case has to be considered on its own merits, and in the light of the factors relevant to the circumstances in which the claim was made late. However, there would be a presumption in favour of admitting an election under section 113(2) of the 1988 Act which is made as soon as is reasonably possible in all the circumstances, but after the statutory time limit has expired, if the reason for the election being late was one of the following:-

> some relevant and uncorrected error on the part of the Inland Revenue has had the effect of misleading the partners or their agent about whether the requirements of the legislation had been met; or
> at a crucial time, one of the required signatories was not available for unforeseeable reasons (eg because of serious illness); or the agent of a signatory was similarly not available and there was no one else who could reasonably be expected to stand in the agent's shoes: or
> there was some other difficulty about obtaining all the required signatures to the election within the time limit, and the Inland Revenue had, before the time limit expired, both been clearly notified that each of the signatories had individually decided to make an election; and been given the reasons why the election could not be made within the time limit.

The board will not admit elections if they were made after the expiry of the time limit because of oversight or negligence on the part of a partner or his or her agent; or because one of the parties to the election temporarily refused to sign it; or because there was a deliberate decision to delay the making of the election because its effect on the taxation liabilities of the relevant parties was not clear by the time the time limit expired.

European Community

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the sums paid by the United Kingdom to the EC, the rebate and the net cost to the United Kingdom for each year since 1973.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Details of the United Kingdom's gross contribution, the refunds and abatement and of the net contribution after public sector receipts on the European Community Budget, for the years 1973 to 1989 were contained in a written answer given by the Financial Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 20 March 1991, at columns 110-12. Details for 1990 and 1991 were published in June 1992 in the "Statement on the 1992 Community Budget", Cm. 1948. The table reproduces the information.

Unemployment Benefits

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the public expenditure total has been spent on benefits related to unemployment for each financial year from 1979-80; and what is the latest estimate for 1992-93 and the expenditure forecast for 1993-94.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1992, c. 31-32]: The figure for social security benefits to the unemployed for 1984-85 should have been £6,320 million, and not £5,320 million as previously stated.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fish Statistics

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) salmon and (b) grilse were removed from the River Bush by his Department in each year since his Department first leased the fishery; what the sale of these fish realised in each year; and what effect their removal had on the number of smelts descending the river in subsequent years.

Mr. Hanley: Separate figures for the number of salmon and grilse removed from the River Bush are not available. The available information is as follows:

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many salmon and grilse have been taken by commercial nets of each type, in Northern Ireland waters in each of the last five years and the current year to date; how many such fish taken by commercial fishermen, and sea netted fish, were landed in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the Irish Republic; and of all fish taken, how many were taken from the Foyle system.

Mr. Hanley: The following tables give the available information. No figures are available for landings in the Republic of Ireland, except that for statistical purposes, half of what is taken in the Foyle Fisheries Commission area is assumed to have been landed in Northern Ireland and half in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland over what period of year is there are available to him records of the numbers of salmon, grilse and sea trout caught in Northern Ireland waters; and where such records are available for inspection or purchase.

Mr. Hanley: In the Foyle Fisheries Commission area, records are available since 1960. The information may be inspected in the Commission's offices at 8 Victoria road, Londonderry BT47 2AB.

In the Fisheries Conservancy Board area records exist from 1968 and may be inspected at the offices of the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries Division, Hut 5, Castle Grounds, Stormont, Belfast BT4 3PW.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what investigations he has carried out to determine the number and percentage of salmon and grilse entering each of the (a) Foyle river system, (b) the Bush system and (c) other rivers in Northern Ireland which support runs of such fish are (i) one sea winter fish, (ii) two sea winter fish and (iii) three or more sea winter fish.

Mr. Hanley: The only investigations of this type are carried out on the River Bush, and the fish are divided into two classes—grilse which are one sea winter fish; and salmon which are two or more sea winter fish. Examination of samples of fish from the River Bush over the last 10 years indicates the following proportions of salmon to grilse:

Smolt year Class	Per cent. returning to river as: Grilse	Salmon

1982	90	10

1987	96	4
1988	82	18
1989	87	13

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Department of Agriculture's original lease for the angling on the River Bush began; when it was renewed; when the lease ends; and if he will publish a list of the papers and reports published, and where they may be puchased or examined, of the work on this fishery carried out by the Department.

Mr. Hanley: The lease began on 1 March 1972, for a period of 30 years and is therefore not due for renewal until 1 March 2003.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has that (a) increasing numbers, (b) an increasing percentage of salmon and grilse are entering the (i) Foyle system, (ii) the Bush system and (iii) other rivers in Northern Ireland which support runs of these fish.

Mr. Hanley: Records of the numbers of wild salmon entering rivers are available only for the Mourne system, River Faughan and River Bush and are as follows. It is not possible to provide figures indicating the percentage of the total run.

Benefits

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for the last 12 months for which figures are available, the number of claims for benefit which were (a) sent to a social fund inspector for review, (b) upheld at the review stage and (c) sent back for review; and if he will also show how many decisions were overturned.

Mr. Hanley: The figures for the period 1 October 1991 to 30 September 1992, which have been provided by the Office of the Social Fund Commissioner, are as follows:

	Number
(a) applications for review by inspectors	1,693
(b) numbers upheld	1,013
(c) numbers referred back to social fund officers	611
(d) decisions substituted by inspectors	424

The figures at (b), (c) and (d) include a number of cases in which the application for review were received before 1 October 1991.

Expenditure

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he now expects to make a detailed statement of the changes in Government expenditure in Northern Ireland which will result from the autumn statement.

Mr. Mates: A statement will be made soon as the distribution of resources among services has been determined. This should be no later than the week beginning 7 December.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Bournemouth Central Station

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what grant aid is to be available to restore Bournemouth central station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's grant schemes for historic buildings are administered by English Heritage. It is able to grant aid works to outstanding historic buildings (which for all practical purposes are those listed as grade I or grade II*) and to other buildings in conservation areas. As Bournemouth central station is listed grade II, and is not a conservation area, it is not eligible for assistance. English Heritage has reviewed the listing of the station but has concluded that upgrading would not be justified.

National Lottery

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will state the qualifications of the GAH Group to carry out the consultant's report on a national lottery; and if he will describe the process by which it was selected from the tenders received.

Mr. Brooke: The GAH group was the best qualified in terms of experience, expertise and cost. Sealed tenders were received on 3 August 1992. Each consultancy made a presentation to a tender board, which scrutinised the bids and made the final decision.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 43, how many firms were invited to tender for the contract of advising him on the impact of a national lottery on the football pools industry and charitable donations.

Mr. Brooke: Five firms were invited to tender.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 43, what policy considerations he used on which to base his choice of firms to be invited to tender for the contract of advising him on the impact of a national lottery on the football pools industry and charitable donations.

Mr. Brooke: The five firms invited to tender were chosen for their expertise and experience. In addition, the Department ensured that none of them was already advising any other client on the national lottery.

EMPLOYMENT

Transfer and Redundancy Rights

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has to apply the provisions of clause 26 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill to (a) local authorities, (b) compulsory competitive tendering, (c) existing contracts and (d) casual contracts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 19 November 1992 at columns 338–39.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will set out in a table the employment change for Great Britain, and by region, between June 1979 to June 1991 with, in separate columns, the (a) percentage change in employees, (b) percentage change in employees and the self-employed together and (c) total change.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is as follows:

Changes in employment in standard regions June 1979 to June 1992

Per cent.

	Employees in employment	Employees and self-employed	Civilian workforce in employment
South East[1]	−5	−1	0
East Anglia	+11	+17	+18
South West	+7	+15	+16
West Midlands	−13	−8	−7
East Midlands	−1	+4	+5
Yorkshire and Humberside	−8	−3	−1
North West	−13	−9	−8
North	−14	−10	−8
Wales	−8	−3	−1
Scotland	−6	−2	0
Great Britain	−6	−1	0

[1] Including Greater London which became a separately identifiable standard region in September 1981. A comparison cannot therefore be made between 1979 and the current date.

Job Clubs

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what access to job vacancies exists for people attending job clubs in the Liverpool travel-to-work area.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mrs. Jane Kennedy, dated 23 November 1992.

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about what access to job vacancies exists for people attending Jobclubs in the Liverpool travel to work area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Until recently Jobclubs in the Liverpool travel to work area received copies of vacancies from Jobcentres in their locality as well as providing access to job vacancy advertisements in local newspapers. Jobclub members are also encouraged to make speculative approaches to employers and most people find jobs this way. The circulation of vacancies from the Jobcentres ceased at the beginning of November because very few Jobclub members were finding work by this method.

However, following representations from local people it has been agreed that the service will be reinstated where a Jobclub specifically requests it.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Operation Granby

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department's fraud squad completed its investigations concerning the chartering of merchant vessels in support of Operation Granby; what conclusions were reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Papers were passed to the Crown prosecution service on 6 November 1992. Investigations continue into certain aspects however and further comment would not be appropriate at this time.

Vanguard

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what problems with welds related to the nuclear reactor were reported in the two weeks before the submarine Vanguard left VSEL Barrow on 23 October for contractor's sea trials; what action was taken by the contractor and his Department; and on what date the members of the Nuclear Powered Warship Safety Committee were informed of the situation.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to comment on the detailed material condition of individual nuclear submarines. I can confirm, however, that as part of normal safety procedures, Vanguard underwent a rigorous safety assessment and a thorough quality assurance audit prior to being cleared for departure on sea trials. The Government place the highest priority on nuclear safety and no submarine would be permitted to go to sea unless we were satisfied that it was safe to do so.

Iraqi Defence Industry

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer on the Iraqi defence industry to the hon. Member for South Shields on 18 November, Official Report, column 251, if he will make a statement about the conclusions of his Department's study into the Iraqi defence industry and its military procurement activity; when this study was concluded; and whether he intends to publish it.

Mr. Aitken: Iraq's defence industry and military procurement activity are subjects of continuing study in my Department. The large scale of Iraq's military production capability and the extensive nature of its international procurement activity have been revealed in the studies we have undertaken. Security considerations preclude the publication of such studies.

Eaglescliffe Royal Naval Stores Depot

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the names and grades of all officials who accompanied the Minister of State for the Armed Forces at his meeting with trade union representatives at RNSD Eaglescliffe on 18 November.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Apart from my private secretary and representatives of local management at the depot, three departmental officials were present during my meeting with trade union representatives at the Royal Naval stores depot Eaglescliffe on 18 November: Mr. G. E. Miller (grade 4), principal director of supplies and transport (stores and victualling), Mr. J. Read (grade 5), director Naval support command implementation and Mr. B. P. Neale (grade 6), head of management strategy, secretariat (fleet support).

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date, by whom, and in what form the request was made by trade union representatives at RNSD Eaglescliffe that hon. and right hon. Members and representatives of local councils should not be present in the depot during the visit on 18 November by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Defence Contracts (Payment)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to expedite the settlement and payment of defence contracts, so as to enable contractors to make prompt payment to their subcontractors; and what is his latest estimate of the amounts outstanding on unsettled accounts for work done.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has a long-standing policy of paying its bills promptly. We normally settle our contract payments within 30 days of receiving invoices, and we will soon be introducing a two-week billing cycle with payment by the bankers automated clearing service.

Payment arrangements and details of outstanding amounts between contractors and their subcontractors are a matter for the companies concerned. However, since my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's statement of 10 March, Official Report, column 753, we have included a clause in all new defence contracts requiring prime contractors to pay their subcontractors within a specified period from receipt of a valid invoice.

On Monday 26 October my Department's central bill-paying organisation held valid bills for some £210 million. We expect these to be paid by 2 November.

HEALTH

NHS Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her latest estimate of the cost to date of implementing the NHS reforms.

Dr. Mawhinney: Details of the sums provided to date are given in the table. Figures for the practice fund management allowance in 1991-92 and 1992-93 correct those published in the departmental report earlier this year (Cm. 1913).

Staff Recruitment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the utility of personality questionnaires in the recruitment of senior NHS staff.

Dr. Mawhinney: Selection criteria for the recruitment of senior staff in the national health service are a matter for each individual NHS employer.

Expenditure

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring is carried out by her Department of overspending in the current year by health service authorities.

Mr. Sackville: Internal monitoring information is collected to assist in the management of the national health service. This includes information on current spending against plans and centrally laid down objectives. Information collected in respect of district health authorities is generally aggregated to a regional level.

Prescription Budgets

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the final out-turn figures for indicative prescription budgets in 1991-92 in each family health service authority area and NHS region; if she will also express those figures as a percentage of the projected budget; what are the indicative budgets for 1992-93 in each FHSA area and NHS region; and if she will express those figures as percentages of (a) the projected budget and (b) the out-turn budgets for 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Ultra-violet Radiation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure by medium on advice on the dangers of over-exposure to UV radiation for the current financial year.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure by the Health Education Authority, which is funded by the Department, on the dangers of over-exposure to existing levels of UV radiation for the current financial year was as follows:

Leaflets and promotional material	32,500
Posters, factcards and feature articles	6,900
Public Information Booklet	4,100
General support costs estimates at 25 per cent.	10,875
(This includes staff time, responding to enquiries etc)
TOTAL	54,375

In addition, the Department issued an information note to health professionals in respect of which no separate costing is available.

Abortion

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information she has concerning the extent of the use in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) overseas in products used in the United Kingdom, of cell-lines from the tissue of aborted babies in the production of (i) polio vaccine, (ii) rubella vaccine, (iii) other vaccines and (iv) other medical and pharmaceutical products;

(2) what guidance is issued by her Department concerning the use of cell lines from the tissue of aborted babies in the production of vaccines and other medical products;

(3) if she will give a breakdown by country of manufacture of those medical, pharmaceutical and other products which are currently approved for use in the United Kingdom and which have been produced using cell lines from the tissue of aborted babies.

Dr. Mawhinney: Human cell lines are used in the manufacture of polio, rubella and hepatitis A vaccines. The cell line MRC5 developed by the Medical Research Council was isolated in the early 1970s from the lungs of a single foetus. Our understanding is that all current needs, and those for the foreseeable future, will be met from this one isolation.

The vaccines may be manufactured in the United Kingdom, Belgium, Germany, France or the United States of America. We are not aware of other licensed products using human cell lines.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and which NHS hospitals in England providing day-care abortion services are offering early medical abortion services in the first nine weeks of pregnancy with mifepristone and prostaglandin.

Mr. Sackville: Information in the form requested is not collected centrally. Abortion notifications between July, when the drug was licensed, and December 1991, the latest period for which figures are available, show that the mifepristone and prostaglandin method was used in 19 national health service hospitals in England and Wales. Identifying information derived from the notification form, including the names of the hospitals concerned, may not be generally disclosed, except in the circumstances specified in regulation 5 of the Abortion Regulations 1991.

Police Vetting

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued during the past 12 months to local authorities' social service departments who because of staff shortages may need to employ persons not yet cleared by the established police vetting procedure.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Incontinence

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration was given to the inclusion of treatment of incontinence in the establishment of health targets in "The Health of the Nation" document.

Dr. Mawhinney: In reaching the decision, after careful consideration, to select five key areas at this time, it was recognised that there were other strong candidates for key area status. However, in the Government's view they required further development and research before national targets could be set—rehabilitation services for people with a physical disability, embracing continence services, was an example. The strategy will be kept under review and further key areas may be added in due course.

Adoption

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adopted people have applied for help in tracing their birth parents since 1976.

Mr. Yeo: Since November 1976, 47,668 adopted persons have applied to the Registrar General under the provisions of section 51 of the Adoption Act 1976 for access to their original birth records. Since May 1991 the Adoption Contact register has been available for adopted persons seeking to trace their natural relatives, by entry on the register. On 17 November 1992 a total of 1,804 adopted persons have had their names entered.

Talking Books

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy on support for the talking book services for the blind.

Mr. Yeo: Talking book services for visually impaired people are largely provided by voluntary organisations, although some social services departments may provide this service or assist a person to obtain it. Audio-cassettes are now available in many local authority libraries.

Older People

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what involvement her Department will take during the 1993 European year of older people and solidarity between generations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Department, in co-operation with the Department of Social Security has overall co-ordinating responsibility for the European Year in the United Kingdom and we are now well advanced with our plans. Following consultation with a wide range of national voluntary and professional bodies, statutory authorities and other relevant Government Departments, a group has been set up to advise on the conduct, promotion and evaluation of the programme. The group involves representatives of organisations reflecting the interests of older people, including the National Pensioners' Convention, and will take direct account wherever possible of the views and preferences of older people themselves. The programme in the United Kingdom will focus on four major themes:

Combatting 'ageism' and promoting positive images of ageing;
Volunteering;
Health promotion and active leisure, including remaining mentally active;
Social integration, including problems of isolation and loneliness, information needs, housing, transport and community care issues.

Four task groups have also been set up to examine each of these themes and put forward specific proposals, and to implement them once agreed, with particular reference to intergenerational and multicultural aspects.

There will be two elements to the year in the United Kingdom: a core programme involving high profile national events focusing on the four themes, including cultural and sporting events, exhibitions and conferences; and a general programme, consisting of activities being organised by individual organisations, but not co-ordinated through the official structure.

The Department is providing funds for the cost of a secretariat to co-ordinate the core programme and to disseminate news and information, and has already committed £81,000 in the current year.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be launching the European Year in the United Kingdom at the age resource awards, which will be presented in London on 17 December by HRH The Prince of Wales, one of a wide range of special events marking the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Council. This project highlights the creative potential and social participation of older people.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring the Government do of the voluntary agreements in tobacco advertising.

Dr. Mawhinney: The voluntary agreement is monitored by the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship. The terms of reference of the committee are set out in appendix 7 of the voluntary agreement. This and its annual reports are in the Library.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the breaches of United Kingdom voluntary agreements on tobacco advertising reported in the fifth annual report of the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship were reported by Dr. Mindell, either personally or on behalf of organisations.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ninety per cent. (28 out of 31 breaches), equally divided between breaches for which tobacco manufacturers were responsible and breaches by shopkeepers and other third parties ("inadvertent breaches").

Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those health authorities in England that have requested water undertakers to increase the fluoride content of water supplies, indicating (i) those that have had their request met, (ii) those whose applications are pending and (iii) those that have been refused.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the survey by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys of the annual rates of cot deaths for 1990 and 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest annual figures published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys show that the rate of sudden infant death (or cot death) in England and Wales fell from 1·93 per 1,000 live births in 1989 to 1·70 in 1990, and again to 1·44 in 1991.

Towards the end of last year, the Government ran a successful media campaign to reduce the risk of cot death. Called the "Back to Sleep" campaign, it highlighted new evidence that the risk of cot death can be reduced if babies are laid to sleep on their back or sides, rather than on their stomachs.

It is a measure of the success of the Government's campaign that the number of cot deaths which occurred in the month of December 1991 was about half the number which occurred in the previous December.

A nationwide confidential enquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy has been established. It will help us find out more about why some babies die and make us better able to prevent this happening in the future.

Disabled Children

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had from the disabilities study unit in regard to the report entitled "Relationships of Children with their Disabled Brothers and Sisters", a copy of which has been sent to her; what reply she is sending; what action she proposes to take; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We have received the report together with a request that the Department assists with the costs of its dissemination. We are considering this request.

GPs (Job Evaluation)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of introducing job evaluation schemes for general practitioners in Birmingham and the west midlands.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are not aware of any plans to introduce such schemes.

Ondine's Syndrome

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many research and specialist establishments exist within the United Kingdom for research and development into the treatment and cure of Ondine's syndrome;

(2) how many persons presently suffering from Ondine's syndrome are presently living within the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available for England. Responsibility for Ondine's syndrome in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is respectively a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to health authorities in cases where a patient, requiring treatment for Ondine's syndrome, lives within their area.

Mr. Sackville: As with other disorders, provision of health care for those suffering from Ondine's syndrome, is made by district health authorities who are responsible for assessing the health needs of their resident populations and purchasing services to meet those needs.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of expenditure was devoted to research into Ondine's syndrome for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: I am not aware of any expenditure being devoted to research specifically into Ondine's syndrome. The main agency through which the Government support medical research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Public Service and Science. The MRC is always willing to consider scientifically sound proposals for research in competition with other applications.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of Ondine's syndrome have been detected annually in the years 1982 to 1992 inclusive.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Bone Marrow Donors

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to identify and encourage bone marrow donors.

Mr. Sackville: Public awareness of bone marrow transplantation as a treatment for leukaemia has increased in recent years. This had led to an increase in the number of people volunteering to become donors, for those situations where a patient does not have a matched sibling donor.

There are two bone marrow donor registers in the United Kingdom. The Anthony Nolan trust is a charity and relies on publicity for its success. The British Bone Marrow and Platelet Donor Panel (BBMPDP) recruits from blood donors directly through the blood transfusion service and does not advertise its work other than at regional transfusion centres. The two United Kingdom registers are working closely to ensure greater co-ordination of effort. This should be of benefit to patients. The Government contribute to the BBMPDP's running costs.

Government support is not limited to the United Kingdom. One of the measures included in the 1990-94 action plan under the "Europe Against Cancer" initiative is a feasibility study on co-operation between European bone marrow donor banks.

NHS Wages Bill

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the cost of increment drift for the NHS wages bill for 1990-91 and 1991-92; and the projected figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Review

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 850, if she will list (a) the terms of reference of the current review of her Department's requirements for information from the NHS, (b) the role of the management consultants used, (c) the timescale for completion of the review and (d) the date for reporting the results of the review to Parliament.

Mr. Sackville: The purpose of the review is to ensure that the burden on the national health service of completing central returns is fully justified by the uses to which the information is put centrally. Management consultants were employed to identify with the NHS those returns representing a significant burden beyond what is required for local operational purposes. The results of the review should be announced early next year.

Parkinson's Disease

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce free prescriptions for the sufferers of Parkinson's disease.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Hospital Advertising

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that patients and relatives may be shielded from televisions and video advertising displays located in accident and emergency and out-patient departments if that is their wish; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Responsibility for managing advertising in hospitals is for local managers who will have regard to the interests of patients and visitors when making arrangements.

Royal College of Nursing Conference

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assurances she gave on the independence of pay review bodies at the Royal College of Nursing annual conference in 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I did not attend the Royal College of Nursing annual conference in 1991.

Creuzfeldt Jakob Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of how Creuzfeldt Jakob disease may be acquired, other than through accidental injection; and what information she has on the nature of the disease-causing agent.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 29 June at column 441.

Information on the incidence of Creuzfeldt Jakob disease in the United Kingdom is set out in annual Creuzfeldt Jakob disease surveillance unit report by Dr. Will, a copy of which is in the Library.

Extensive epidemiological information on Creuzfeldt Jakob disease cases collected by the unit does not reveal an association between the disease and particular activities. Neither is there any indication that the pattern or incidence of Creuzfeldt Jakob disease has changed over the last two decades.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been produced to assist patients who may be contaminated with Creuzfeldt Jakob disease in the event that they (a) have children, (b) intend to donate blood or other organs and (c) wish to undertake tattoos.

Mr. Yeo: The Creuzfeldt Jakob disease surveillance unit has produced patient information on Creuzfeldt Jakob disease which is provided on a doctor-to-patient basis—a copy is in the Library. This makes no specific reference to the children of Creuzfeldt Jakob disease patients as there is no evidence to suggest Creuzfeldt Jakob disease can be passed between family members either through normal contact or in pregnancy. Neither does it refer to tattoos as there is no evidence of peripheral inoculation transmitting the infection.

For guidance in respect of potential blood and organ donors I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave him on 29 June at column 443.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken to quantify the proportion of persons, showing no symptoms of disease, who may be carrying the infectious agent causing Creuzfeldt Jakob disease.

Mr. Yeo: As yet there is no test to identify asymptomatic infection in humans. It is not therefore possible to identify those who may be carrying the Creuzfeldt Jakob disease agent.

Hospices

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy on the development of hospices; and what is the level of financial support earmarked for this purpose for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The Government greatly appreciate the contribution of the voluntary hospice movement and of national health service units, to the provision of specialised care and support for terminally ill people and their families. Any individual or group considering developing a hospice or hospice-type services should discuss their ideas with the local health authority to ensure that services match local needs.

Since 1990-91, the Government have allocated funds annually to regional health authorities in England specifically to enable them to increase the support they give to voluntary hospices. The sums allocated have been:

	£ million
1990-91	8
1991-92	17
1992-93	32

Renal Patients

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce into the patients charter a specified time limit within which renal patients will be guaranteed the disconnect system.

Mr. Sackville: Under the patients charter patients are guaranteed admission for treatment within a maximum of two years from the time they are placed on the waiting list. However, patients suffering from end-stage renal failure are not placed on waiting lists. As emergencies they are treated immediately by means of dialysis or kidney transplant.

NHS Pay Policy

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the NHS executive statement and guidelines on the 1·5 per cent. pay policy in the NHS; and if she will list those who were sent this advice.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have written to the chairmen of all health service employing bodies setting out the arrangements for implementing the policy of restricting public sector pay settlements to a maximum of 1·5 per cent. in the coming year. The chief executive of the NHS Management Executive also wrote to general managers and chief executives setting out the key figures for public expenditure on health and priorities for use of those resources.

Copies of both letters have been placed in the Library.

Clinical Grading

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current number of clinical grading cases remaining to be heard under section 32 of the Whitley Council agreement at (a) regional health authority level and when they are expected to be concluded and (b) at national level and when they are expected to be concluded; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 November 1992]: At 30 September 1992 there were 19,908 appeals outstanding at regional health authority level and 2,138 at national level. Initiatives are being taken to bring the process to the earliest possible conclusion. Due to the introduction of new appeals procedures the number of national appeals heard in the six months up to 31 October 1992 was almost twice the number heard in the 18 months prior to that date.

Disease Statistics

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current incidence of (a) Lyme's disease, (b) leptospirosis, (c) trichanella spiralis, (d) Q fever and (e) toxoplasmosis.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Laboratory reports to the Public Health Laboratory Service Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre for England and Wales for these infections are as follows. It should be noted that the data are provisional and do not differentiate between indigenous and imported cases.

Disease	Laboratory reports 1991
(a) lyme disease	39
(b) leptospirosis	30
(c) trichinosis	0
(d) Q fever	74
(e) toxoplasmosis[1]	635

[1] A British Paediatric Surveillance Unit survey on congenital toxoplasmosis—the serious form of this condition—showed 14 symptomatic babies (0-1 year) in England and Wales for a 12 month period in 1989-90.

NHS Capital Schemes

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what capital projects costing £1 million or more are currently scheduled by each regional health authority; what is the anticipated date of completion for each project; what was the original projected completion date for each project; and how many projects and at what total value, have been removed from the 1992-93 capital programme in each regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 20 November 1992]: The latest information available on capital schemes costing over £1 million under construction in each regional health authority area is shown in the table. Management of the capital programme is a matter for individual regional health authorities, and information on schemes in planning or removed from the programme is not held centrally. In total, some 400 schemes each costing more than £1 million are at various stages of planning, design and construction throughout the NHS in England.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he will arrange for officials from his Department to meet representatives of the Graphics Company, Ivybridge, Devon, to discuss the application for regional selective assistance made by the company last August;

(2) what plans he has to make a decision on the application for regional selective assistance submitted in August by the Graphics Company, Ivybridge, South Devon.

Mr. Sainsbury: Officials of my Department met the Graphics Company on 18 November. A decision on the company's application for regional selective assistance is expected by the end of November.

Export Licences

Mr. Bennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to provide to Parliament such information on export licences as is provided to the inquiry conducted by Lord Justice Scott.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of all applications for export licences to Iraq in respect of machine tools, equipment and arms that were either approved or rejeted under the rules laid down by his predecessor in 1985 that were submitted by Marconi, GEC, BAC, Colchester Lathes or any subsidiary companies; and if he will make a statement about the extent of those applications from subsidiary companies over the same period.

Mr. Needham: No. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it has been the practice of successive Administrations not to disclose such information. However, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Minutes of Evidence to the Trade and Industry Select Committee, 26 November 1991, pp 37-106.

Policy Initiatives

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the initiatives taken on industrial policy by him during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: Since the beginning of the United Kingdom presidency, we have made further significant progress towards completion of the single market programme—the free trade principles of which will assist the development of business within the Community. The United Kingdom presidency has also achieved a key objective with the adoption by the Internal Market Council on 10 November of a resolution on "Making the Single Market Work". This resolution should help to ensure that single market legislation is implemented effectively and enforced evenly throughout the Community.

As well as taking forward work in hand in the Council of Ministers, the United Kingdom presidency has promoted two initiatives: on industrial competitiveness and evironmental protection and on administrative simplification. The former should ensure the proper integration of environmental and industrial policies at Community level and the close involvement of industy in the development of policies designed to achieve the Community's environmental objectives. The latter should ensure that new legislation at Community level does not add unnecessary burdens to business.

The Industry Council which I shall be chairing on 24 November will have a substantial agenda covering many aspects of EC industrial policy, including draft resolutions on the initiatives referred to above.

Betws Mine, Ammanford

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will direct the British Coal Corporation immediately to desist from blocking access to coal reserves at the Betws mine, Ammanford; and forthwith to seek bids by public tender from potential operators with a view to continuing mining operations as from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Ministers have no powers to give specific directions about the conduct of its business to British Coal.

The corporation has assured me that it will continue to discharge responsibly its duty to consider applications from responsible organisations seeking licences to mine coal. British Coal has also given me an assurance that when coaling ceases at Betws it will ensure that the fabric of the pit is preserved so that, if at the end of the statutory consultation period it is decided to keep it open, that will be possible.

Pit Closures

Mr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many British Coal staff have been disciplined or dismissed for releasing to commercial organisations lists of names of British Coal employees likely to be in receipt of lump sum redundancy payments during the present round of pit closures.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 November 1992]: This is a matter for British Coal.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will update his answer of 17 January 1992, Official Report, column 716, with respect to the trading operations of the Technology and Development Group based in London, in connection with the procurement of military usable technology for Iraq.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 November 1992]: I have nothing to add to the earlier answer given by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much cover was provided by the Export Credit Guarantee Department for exports to Iraq in the period from 1985 to the outbreak of hostilities; and how much of it is outstanding.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 20 November 1992]: A total of £615 million medium-term credit was made available to Iraq in the form of a series of financial protocols between 1985 and the outbreak of hostilities. In addition ECGD also insured cash and short-term credit transactions of £725 million over the same period. At present £830 million remains outstanding for payment, of which, as at 31 October 1992, £463 million represented unrecovered claims paid by ECGD.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current amount of coal produced from opencast mining in tonnes and as a percentage of current coal production.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 November 1992]: Total production of opencast coal in 1991-92 from British Coal Opencast and licensed private sector producers was 19 million tonnes, 21 per cent. of the total United Kingdom coal production.

Energy Enterprises

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the application of the 1·5 per cent. pay rise ceiling to each of (a) those energy enterprises which are still nationalised and (b) those energy enterprises now privatised in which the Government maintain a substantial minority shareholding.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 November 1992]: In the autumn statement the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced that pay settlements in the public sector and related bodies will be restricted to the range 0-1·5 per cent. in the coming year. This policy applies to energy enterprises which are publicly owned, namely: British Coal Corporation, Nuclear Electric plc, British Nuclear Fuels plc, the UK Atomic Energy Authority and Scottish Nuclear Ltd. The policy does not apply to energy enterprises in which the Government have a minority shareholding.

Second-hand Gas Appliances

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps will he take to extend safety standards to second-hand gas appliances, beyond 1 January 1996.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 November 1992]: A high standard of safety is already required for second hand gas cookers under the Gas Cooking Appliances (Safety) Regulations 1989. The regulation of these products after 1 January 1996 will be maintained and I am also considering the possibility of extending the same level of consumer protection to a wider range of second hand gas appliances.

Office of Electricity Regulation

Mr. Caborn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many contracts have been put out to consultancies by the Office of Electricity Regulation; what are their subjects, cost and completion dates; and which ones have been or will be published.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 November 1992]: This is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply. I have passed the question to the director general and he will write to give the information and place it in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many whole-time equivalent staff work for the Office of Electricity Regulation; and what are their grades, functions and location.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 November 1992]: This is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply. I have passed the question to the director general and he will write to give the information and place it in the House of Commons Library.

Assisted Area Status

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will extend the areas eligible for assisted area status to north Staffordshire as part of his review of assisted area status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 20 November 1992]: The needs and circumstances of all areas including north Staffordshire will be carefully considered in the review.

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the submission of intent for assisted area status presented by the city of Stoke on Trent on 13 November.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 20 November 1992]: My Department has received a submission which the city of Stoke on Trent made jointly with other Staffordshire organisations in September. To date, the further submission dated 13 November referred to has not been received. I shall be considering the needs and circumstances of all areas and all the representations received as part of the present assisted areas map review.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charters

34. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many new charters are scheduled for publication in the next six months.

Mr. Waldegrave: Twenty-seven charters have been published to date. Six more charters will be published over the next six months.

41. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on private sector funding of scientific research.

Mr. Jackson: Private sector funding for scientific research is buoyant. Such funding almost doubled in real terms over the 1985-1990 period.

Justices of the Peace (Stockport)

42. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to appoint new Stockport JPs who live in north Reddish and south Reddish or Brinnington wards; and when he expects to appoint new Tameside JPs who live in the Denton, North-East ward.

Mr. Waldegrave: My advisory committee in Stockport is currently processing 51 applications, two of which are from the wards concerned. In Tameside my advisory committee has recently recommended the names of 10 prospective justices of which four are from Denton, one of them from Denton, North-East ward.

Citizens Charter

43. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations he has received since 9 April from members of the public about the citizens charter programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We have since 9 April received nearly 1,500 letters from members of the public referring to the citizens charter. This is a clear indication of the charter's success in encouraging people to demand better, more responsive services.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all units of central Government currently under consideration for executive agency status, their parent Department and the number of staff employed in each case in full-time equivalents.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The current list of activities announced by Departments as under consideration for executive agency status, together with their parent department and staff employed is as follows:

Health and Safety Policies (Agencies)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place a copy in the Library of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Jackson: The chief executives of the Central Office of Information, the Civil Service college, her Majesty's Stationery Office, the Occupational Health Service and the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency are responsible for health and safety policy within their agencies.

I am placing in the Library copies of the health and safety policies applying in the Central Office of Information and Her Majesty's Stationery Office. I am also placing in the Library a copy of volume IV of the Cabinet Office staff handbook, which contains the Cabinet Office's health and safety policy. This will continue to apply in the Civil Service college, the Occupational Health Service and the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency until separate health and safety policies have been developed and put in place.

SCOTLAND

National Monuments

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many ancient and historic monuments in Scotland were added to the national monuments record in each year since 1989;

(2) if he will list the reported instances of damage to scheduled ancient and historical monuments in Scotland from 1989 to 1992; and what action was taken on the discovery of the damage;

(3) how many ancient and historical monuments in Historic Scotland aims to schedule from 1992 to 1995;

(4) how many management agreements for national monuments were made in 1991.

Mr. Lang: I have passed the hon. Member's questions to the chief executive of Historic Scotland and asked him to reply direct.

Letter from G. Munro to Mr. Nigel Griffiths, dated 22 November 1992:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about ancient and historical monuments in Scotland.

Firstly, you asked how many ancient and historical monuments were added to the National Monuments Record of Scotland (NMRS) in each of the years from 1989 to 1992. The Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland (RCAHMS) is responsible for maintaining a comprehensive archive and database in the form of the NMRS. I have therefore contacted the RCAHMS who informed me that they added the following number of monuments to the NMRS:—

	Number
1989-90	2,430
1990-91	2,586
1991-92	2,050

The Commission inform me that the figure for 1991-92 will be increased by air photographs of sites discovered in that period which have yet to be fully incorporated into the NMRS. In addition 1991-92 was the year in which the whole national archive was moved to new premises.

Secondly, you asked the Secretary of State if he would list the reported instances of damage to scheduled ancient and historical monuments in Scotland from 1989 to 1992; and what action was taken on the discovery of the damage. No central record of such cases is maintained but we are aware of 35 cases during the period. In such cases we would normally write to the owner of the monument, or the person who had carried out the work which had damaged the monument, seeking an explanation for the unauthorised works. This could result in remedial action being taken or in extreme cases the matter being referred to the Procurator Fiscal for possible prosecution.

Thirdly, you asked how many ancient and historical monuments in Scotland Historic Scotland aim to schedule from 1992 to 1995. As shown in Annex A to our Corporate Plan for 1992-95, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library, we aim to schedule 900 monuments in this period—300 per year.

Finally, you asked how many management agreements for national monuments were made in 1991. The answer to that question is eight.

Green Policies

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the Departmental Green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures and which possible measures have been considered and rejected and on what grounds.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 19 November 1992]: The Government's policy on the protection of the ozone layer is set out in the 1990 White Paper "This Common Inheritance" and the subsequent yearly reports. It is to control and eliminate as quickly as possible the production and supply of ozone-depleting substances. This will be reflected in the Scottish Office's green housekeeping strategy, currently in the course of preparation, which will include a presumption against the purchase of any products which cause significant damage to the environment during manufacture, use or disposal, if a suitable alternative is available.

Domiciliary Family Planning

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those health authorities which provided domiciliary family planning services in each year since 1985.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 November 1992]: Since 1985, five health boards—Forth Valley, Grampian, Greater Glasgow, Lothian and Tayside—have provided continuous domiciliary family planning services.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase the funds available to local authorities for the maintenance of listed buildings owned by themselves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 November 1992]: Local authority current expenditure is supported by aggregate external finance which, with the exception of specific grants, is not hypothecated to particular services. So far as capital expenditure is concerned, each authority receives annually a block capital consent allocation which it is free to augment by revenue contributions and capital receipts. Within the total levels of support available to them, authorities are free to set their own current and capital expenditure priorities.

University Research

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the amount of research funding to universities in Scotland from agencies funded by his Department.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Financial allocations for programmes, including higher education, within the Scottish block will be announced in the near future.

Single-tier Councils

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the costs of the consultation exercise in relation to the proposals for single-tier councils in Scotland, indicating how many consultation documents, videos and leaflets have been distributed and at what cost.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 November 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

	Number produced to date	Cost[1] (£)	Number distributed to date
Consultation paper	22,500	72,000	17,000
Video	900	27,500	785
Leaflets	110,000	31,000	75,000

[1] Costs shown are production costs and do not include postage.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial contribution will be made to local authorities for supplementation to private nursing homes for the year beginning 1 April 1993.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend announced on 2 October that he was making available £40·6 million to local authorities in 1993-94, being the transfer of resources from the Department of Social Security and a further £20 million for other costs associated with implementation of our community care reforms. These sums are not hypothecated to expenditure on particular types of services but we expect authorities to devote a significant part of these resources to supporting new residents of nursing homes in the private sector.

Police (Court Appearances)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many citations to appear in court were issued to police officers in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available; and how many were withdrawn prior to the date of the trial in each year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 November 1992]: This information is not recorded.

Sheep Annual Premiums

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of sheep annual premium application forms for the current year received so far from sheep producers in the Western Isles have been wrongly completed; what the percentages of false completion were in the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 November 1992]: A total of 0·74 per cent. of applications for the 1992 sheep annual premium from sheep producers in the Western Isles have been wrongly completed and rejected for payment. The information for earlier years is not readily available.

TRANSPORT

Road Pricing

10. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards road pricing.

Mr. MacGregor: We are undertaking a major three year study of congestion in London. This is to inform debate on road pricing in towns and cities. No decisions have been taken. As the Chancellor indicated in his autumn statement, I will publish a Green Paper early next year on the scope for motorway charging.

Networker Trains (Kent)

11. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the prospects for the introduction of the proposed Networker express trains for east Kent and the Kent coastal service.

Mr. Freeman: In the autumn statement the Government announced an increase in BR's external finance. British Rail will be allowed to order up to £150 million of rolling stock on leases over the next three years. BR has not yet decided which rolling stock orders would be suitable for leases but is considering this matter at present.

Rail Access (Disabled People)

13. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he gives British Rail about making provision for access by the disabled.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail takes account of the needs of people with disabilities in the provision of its services and facilities.

The Department is represented on BR's advisory group on disability, which includes people with a wide range of disabilities. The Department's disability unit also works closely with BR on these issues.

Cones

14. Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further measures he will take to reduce the number of cones on roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We are actively pursuing measures to reduce the number of cones on the national road network to the minimum consistent with safety, and with the smooth flow of traffic through roadworks. These include: the development of improved road materials which require less maintenance, increased use of incentive contracts to reduce contract periods, and use of moving vehicles instead of cones to close lanes for routine maintenance.

Channel Tunnel

15. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss rail links to the channel tunnel.

Mr. MacGregor: I meet regularly with the chairman of British Rail and channel tunnel issues are often discussed.

16. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive from British Rail its proposals for a specific route for a new rail link between King's Cross and Folkestone.

Mr. Freeman: I expect a report by the end of December containing a reference case route and associated options.

29. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his best estimate of the difference in cost between building the proposed channel tunnel rail link to the largest European gauge and the gauge measurements favoured by Union Railways.

Mr. Freeman: Union Railways' costed proposals and options will be submitted to Government by the end of the year. Its report will include proposals for the gauge of the link.

Road Crashes

17. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress in the reduction of deaths and serious injuries from road crashes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The provisional figures for the 12 months ending in June 1992 are: 4,585 deaths, 50,695 serious injuries and 312,278 slight injuries. These figures show that, for deaths and serious injuries, the Government have already almost achieved their target of reducing road casualties by one-third by the year 2000.

Coal Mining Areas

18. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to draw up a transport policy to create a more appropriate infrastructure for traditional coal mining areas.

Mr. Macgregor: The Government fully recognise the importance of good transport infrastructure in promoting economic regeneration. The Government will continue their policy of promoting a high level of investment in transport infrastructure in all modes, both in traditional mining areas and elsewhere. Major transport policies in south Yorkshire which will assist coal mining areas include the £29 million Dearne towns link road—supported by transport supplementary grant—and the channel tunnel rail freight terminal at Wakefield.

Ports (Trade)

19. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the proportion of trade coming to British ports at weekends as opposed to weekdays.

Mr. Norris: Although no overall assessment can be made of the proportion of trade coming to British ports at weekends from the available information, most British major ports are open at weekends and there are indications of significant weekend demand at some ports.

London-Leicester Line

20. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what future plans he has for the electrification of the London-Leicester line.

Mr. Freeman: At present, it is for British Rail to come forward with investment proposals it considers worthwhile and in the light of available resources. I understand that electrification will be one of the options considered when the existing rolling stock reaches the end of its economic life.

Railways (Leaf Fall)

21. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what success British Rail has had in dealing with the autumn leaf fall on to rail lines.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has implemented a range of measures to deal with the perennial leaf problem. These have included the spreading of sandite paste on the track at noted trouble spots, special driver training, and the management of lineside vegetation. I believe that these measures have helped to minimise delays.

East London River Crossing

22. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when work will start on the east London river crossing.

Mr. Norris: We hope to be able to start work soon on this important scheme. However, construction cannot begin until the current High Court challenges and the question of the EC infraction proceedings have been resolved. In the meantime, we are pressing on with detailed design and other advance work.

Environmental Impact

23. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he plans to introduce to reduce the environmental impact of transport.

Mr. MacGregor: From the end of this year most new cars will require catalytic converters to meet tighter EC emissions standards. The United Kingdom Government continue to press for even tighter emissions and noise standards for vehicles and to discuss with other member states and the Commission measures to improve the fuel efficiency of new cars.

From 1 August 1993, certain existing vehicles over 16 tonnes will be required to have speed limiters. This measure complements the introduction of speed limiters for new heavy goods vehicles on 1 August 1992 and will improve fuel consumption and reduce emissions.

The MOT emissions check introduced for cars in November 1991 is helping to reduce exhaust emissions. Since 1 September there has been a metered smoke test in the annual test for heavy diesels. A similar test for light vans and diesel cars shortly will be included for the first time in the MOT test from 1 January 1993.

We are working on a number of other initiatives for 1992-93, including the publication of an updated manual of environmental appraisal. The White Paper "This Common Inheritance—The Second Year Report" gives further information about our work to reduce the impact of transport on the environment.

Rail Privatisation

24. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his plans for the privatisation of British Rail's island assets.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is now analysing the responses to the consultation document on franchising issued on 12 October. We hope to be able to announce early next year the first services or groups of services that will be prepared for franchising. We are considering whether the Isle of Wight services will be included in that announcement.

Red Routes

25. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to instigate an independent review to determine how the pilot red routes have been operating.

Mr. Norris: Independent monitoring of the pilot red route scheme by the transport research laboratory has already shown how well it has been operating.

River Travel (London)

26. Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he has taken to improve travel in London by river.

Mr. Norris: Since the Marchioness Disaster in 1989, my Department immediately accepted all the recommendations in the Marine Accident Investigation Branch's report into the loss of the Marchioness and took immediate action to implement them as quickly as possible. All but five of the 27 recommendations have been fully implemented and action on the outstanding recommendations should be completed by the end of the year. Action is now in hand on all 22 recommendations in the Hayes report of the inquiry into river safety.

For the future, I wish to explore further the potential for both passenger and freight traffic on the River Thames and I hope to make an announcement about this shortly.

Third Aviation Package

27. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made towards the implementation of the third aviation package; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Good progress has been made in preparations to make the appropriate changes to existing United Kingdom legislation. The necessary statutory instruments will be laid before the House shortly so that these changes can be in place by the end of the year.

Severn Bridge

28. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about traffic flows on the Severn bridge since the last change in tolls.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: About 4½ million vehicles have travelled westbound over the Severn bridge since 26 April when the concessionaires, Severn River Crossing plc, introduced a new one-way toll. This is about 6 per cent. less than the figure for the same period in 1991. No figures are available for eastbound, non-tolled, traffic.

Penzance-Exeter Line

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will come to a decision on the proposal for electrification of the British Rail South West main line from Penzance to Exeter.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has not put forward any proposals for electrification of the Great Western main line. Electrification will be one of the options considered by British Rail to replace infrastructure and rolling stock when they reach the end of their economic lives.

Bus Users

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to expand regional transport users' consultative committees to cover bus users.

Mr. Freeman: No. It would be inappropriate to expand the role of the transport users consultative committees to cover buses which operate in a competitive environment.

Hayes Bypass

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he is undertaking into the effects upon pedestrians and vehicular traffic in Northolt following the opening of the Hayes bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: None. The roads in question are the responsibility of the London borough of Ealing.

Duty-free Goods

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that aircraft and ships are not overloaded as a result of the changes in duty-free and duty-paid concessions from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Norris: The proposed changes in duty-free and duty-paid concessions from 1 January 1993 will not have any effect on the loading of goods on aircraft and ships.

It is, and will remain, the duty of the commander of the ship and aircraft to ensure he is satisfied that all goods loaded onto the vessel or aircraft are stowed, distributed, secured and segregated so as to ensure that the load may be carried safely on the voyage or flight. Such loading would be in accordance with the design and performance characteristics of the vessel or aircraft. Monitoring, by a process of ongoing inspections by the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) for aircraft and the Surveyor General's Organisation (SGO) for marine vessels, ensure that safety standards are not compromised.

London Underground

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the Jubilee line extension to come into operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I cannot offer a precise date. There is planned to be a 53-months' construction period, which would start after the conclusion of a formal agreement with the administrators of Olympia and York Canary Wharf on the terms of its contribution to the cost of the extension.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions in November on which he held discussions with London Underground; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I discuss matters affecting the underground regularly with the chairman of London Transport and I have done so on a number of occasions during November; the topics covered include the public expenditure settlement, the Jubilee line and industrial relations.

Rail Services (Disabled People)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the importance of (a) local rail services and (b) the national rail network to disabled people.

Mr. Freeman: The Secretary of State and I are well aware of the importance of rail services to disabled passengers as is British Rail. That is why the Department of Transport is represented on BR's advisory group on disability, which includes people with a wide range of disabilities. The Department's disability unit also works closely with BR on these issues and I know that British Rail does take account of the needs of people with disabilities in the provision of services and facilities.

Bus Companies

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of local authority-owned bus companies.

Mr. Macgregor: Following the autumn statement by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, I would like to remind local authorities that if they sell their public transport companies (PTCs) by 31 December 1993, they will be able to devote the proceeds to projects such as the improvement of public transport. After that date 50 per cent. of the proceeds will have to be used for the reduction of their debt. I trust this will encourage the sale of the remaining PTCs before we fulfil our manifesto commitment to make their sale compulsory.

Although I expect that future sales of PTCs will be by competitive tender, I am pleased to say that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has agreed that the time limit previously announced in relation to pension arrangements for those PTCs where sales to buy-out teams have already been agreed in principle, will be extended to 30 June 1993. The staff concerned will be able to remain within the local government superannuation scheme if the sales are completed by that date, and I would urge all concerned to meet this deadline.

I have today issued a direction to the Greater Manchester Passenger Transport Authority, the sole shareholder of Greater Manchester Buses Ltd., to produce a plan to divide the company into separate smaller companies. The direction is issued in accordance with section 61 of the Transport Act 1985 and the plan must be submitted to me by 30 March 1993.

I have taken this step to bring the full benefits of bus deregulation to bus passengers in Greater Manchester. The very size of Greater Manchester Buses has tended to inhibit competition between operators and I am convinced that dividing the company into smaller units will bring better services to passengers. I look to the PTA, using its expertise on public transport matters and local knowledge, to produce a workable plan to achieve the division of Greater Manchester Buses.

Shipping Records

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints have been made (a) in each of the past three years an (b) so far this year (i) by his Department and (ii) by the contractor at the relevant time in respect of the operation of the Small Ships Register.

Mr. Norris: I am not aware of any complaint about the day-to-day running of the register.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the importance of the General Register and Record Office of Shipping and Seamen to modern historians of British and Commonwealth merchant shipping and seamen.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend is aware that the services of the registry are valued by modern historians undertaking research, some of whom have written letters of support for the registry. We will want to ensure that the registry continues to provide this service following the market testing.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Gummer: Before an agency is created, there is a thorough assessment of alternative options, including privatisation and contractorisation. Each agency is reviewed after three years in operation and privatisation and contractorisation are again considered.

When I announced on 25 July 1990 that ADAS was to become an agency I said that privatisation could, in the longer run, be the logical development. Any change of status for a MAFF agency would be announced at the appropriate time.

Foreign Fishing Vessels

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to amend regulations currently allowing foreign-owned super-trawlers to register under British registration and prevent them from fishing British waters.

Mr. Curry: As a result of the European Court ruling given in the Factortame case last year, non-British EC nationals may register fishing vessels in the United Kingdom provided those vessels are to be operated, managed and controlled from here. Beam trawlers like other fishing vessels are subject to United Kingdom licensing and quota management rules, but any restriction on grounds of nationality would be discriminatory and contrary to Community law. Fisheries Departments operate a restrictive licensing policy so that any newly registered beam trawler will need to have transferred onto it a licence which has been issued to an existing vessel. This arrangement restricts access of beam trawlers in order to protect stocks. It has applied in the North sea since August this year and was an extension of the arrangements which existed in area VII since 1985.

Shellfish

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to offer full compensation to shellfish producers who operate within shellfish fisheries where they are adversely affected by the pumping of sewage into the sea.

Mr. Curry: As part of the discussions now underway we are helping shellfishermen to overcome problems arising from the microbiological status of the water. Responsibility in relation to the discharge of sewage or treated sewage effluent lies with the National Rivers Authority, which applies controls by means of consents issued under the Water Resources Act 1991.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being undertaken by his Department to carry out tests on contamination of shellfish fisheries with (a) sewage and (b) heavy metals and other chemicals.

Mr. Curry: With the co-operation of the local authorities concerned, my Department has undertaken a comprehensive survey of the microbiological status of all known shellfish-growing waters in England and Wales. The preliminary results of this survey were published for comment in July. A revised survey will be published following discussions with shellfish growers and others now in progress. Monitoring will continue and classifications will be reviewed regularly. The aquatic environment is regularly monitored for levels of heavy metals and other chemicals and reports are published. The latest report, "Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report Number 30" (ISSN 0142–2499), was published in October. A copy is available in the Library of the House. The National Rivers Authority undertakes similar monitoring.

Agri-environmental Measures

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make representations to the EC to ensure that a substantial proportion of the common agricultural policy budget is allocated to the agri-environment programme.

Mr. Curry: The level of funds to be attributed to agri-environment programmes will be decided annually along with the rest of the EC budget. It will depend on a range of factors, including uptake by member states. The Government's view will depend on the balance of such factors when each year's budget is set.

Genetic Resources

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is currently undertaken by his Department to extend long-term protection to the crops that are poorly represented in long-term gene banks and to their wild relatives.

Mr. Curry: The Department currently funds a number of plant genetic resource collections, including the vegetable gene bank at Wellesbourne, Warwickshire and the collections of wild species at the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew and Wakehurst Place. Earlier this year the Department, in collaboration with the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department, completed a review of United Kingdom policy in this area, taking account of present collections, international developments, and future requirements. The findings of that review were made publicly available and its recommendations are now being implemented with a view to improved coverage and co-ordination, value for money, and utilisation of collections.

Pesticides

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is currently undertaken by his Department to comply with the Food and Agriculture Organisation code of conduct on the distribution and use of pesticides.

Mr. Soames: The Department complies with this code principally through the strict controls under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 which require that only approved pesticides may be advertised, sold, supplied, stored or used. In addition the new EC Regulation 2455/92 on the Import and Export of Certain Dangerous Chemicals incorporates the prior informed consent procedure, which is based on the principles in the FAO code. The Health and Safety Commission and Exectutive is the designated national authority for the regulation.

Grazing Management

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to introduce an incentive scheme for sheep farmers in less-favoured areas to establish grazing management schemes which include consideration for the hiring of grazing and the conservation of habitats.

Mr. Curry: The Government plan to introduce, under the Agri-environment Regulation, a scheme which will provide for an environmentally favourable extensification of sheep farming. This will include appropriate grazing conditions aimed at the conservation of habitats. The new scheme will supplement the beneficial effects of the environmentally sensitive areas scheme on grazing management in the less favoured areas.

Vegetation and Wildlife

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research work and monitoring is currently being carried out by his Department on the effects of extensification upon vegetation and wildlife populations.

Mr. Curry: The Department's environmental research and development programme includes a number of projects which examine the effects of different forms of more extensive management practices upon both vegetation and wildlife. In addition the monitoring of schemes such as set-a-side, extensification and, particularly, environmentally sensitive areas assesses the vegetation changes and the effects on wildlife populations.

Heather Regeneration

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to offer financial incentives to livestock farmers in less-favoured areas to fence-off certain areas of land in order to promote heather regeneration.

Mr. Curry: It is already our policy to promote heather regeneration within the less favoured areas: 50 per cent. grants are available under the farm and conservation grant scheme to meet the cost of fencing off moor and heathland to exclude stock and for ancillary operations to encourage heather regeneration in the fenced off areas. Our environmentally sensitive areas (ESA) scheme also encourages appropriate heather management, including in some cases the use of temporary fencing to exclude stock. Heather regeneration will be further promoted with the extension of our ESAs and the development of a new scheme to reduce livestock numbers where this will be environmentally beneficial.

Cattle (Transport)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements have been made with the Dutch Government concerning the sealing of lorries carrying British cattle in transit to Holland before and after 1 January 1993; and what steps have been taken to protect the welfare of the animals concerned.

Mr. Soames: We have received no formal request from the Dutch authorities about the saling of lorries carrying British cattle in transit to Holland and cattle for export are not sealed in transporters.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific criteria are used to confirm a case of BSE.

Mr. Soames: Diagnosis of BSE is principally by histophathological examination of brain tissue. For the majority of animals, examination is confined to a single section of the brain stem. For animals born after 18 July 1988, histopathological examination has been supplemented by examination for scrapie—associated fibrils (SAFs) from cervical spinal cord. Where suspects are the offspring of confirmed cases, diagnosis currently involves histopathological examination of whole brain and SAF extraction.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 781, how many positive cases of BSE were in (a) cows and (b) male cattle.

Mr. Soames: Up to 30 October 1992 in Great Britain, 72,031 cases of BSE have been confirmed in female cattle and 201 in male cattle.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the cattle offspring, born of BSE-infected mothers, as stated in the Southwood report, developed BSE.

Mr. Soames: The monitoring study described in paragraph 8.1 of the Southwood report has not produced any results yet as it is being conducted as a blind experiment. Field evidence derived from the BSE epidemic as a whole shows that to 9 November 1992 there are 190 confirmed BSE cases in animals which were offspring of previously confirmed cases. This incidence is the same as the incidence in cattle whose dams are unaffected.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 781, if he will publish geographical details of confirmed BSE cases.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 22 October, Official Report, column 354. Some of these cases will have been clinically suspected before the period.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 781, when the study into the amount of infected material required to be eaten to cause BSE in cattle commenced; when it will be completed; how many animals are involved in the study; what results he has available for the number of cattle developing BSE from oral challenge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This study began in January 1992. It involves four groups of 10 cattle, each group being exposed to a different dose of infected material. Its completion is dependent on the length of time before the presentation of clinical symptoms (particularly in the group receiving the smallest challenge dose, where the incubation period is expected to be the longest). So far, no cattle in the study have shown symptoms of the disease.

Harwich Fishermen

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much notice was given to Harwich fishermen using vessels of 10 m and over of the prohibition, as from midnight of 17 November, on their catching any more sole, cod or spratts, for the rest of the month; what will happen, and for what size of vessels, in this respect in December 1992 and in January 1993; what length of notice he usually gives to fishermen on such occasions; and whether he is satisfied with the way in which Harwich fishermen were informed of the prohibition.

Mr. Curry: United Kingdom quotas are divided between various industry groups in accordance with a methodology agreed with the industry. In order to ensure that fish landed do not exceed the United Kingdom quota allocations, and other groups are not prejudiced, when it becomes clear that a group's allocation of any stock has been exhausted, Departments close the fishery to that group. It became clear to Departments on Monday 16 November that these closures would be necessary. Immediate action was set in train to issue licence variations suspending fishing from midnight on 17 November for these stocks until the end of 1992 by over 10 m boats. Those variations were despatched by the Department to Harwich fishermen on Wednesday 18 November. It is the Department's normal practice to notify fishermen of such changes as soon as practicable given the circumstances relating to a particular closure. Because fisheries are not closed until it is absolutely necessary to do so, it is not possible to give advance warning of such closures in every case. I am satisfied that given the circumstances Harwich fishermen were informed properly of these closures. So far as January 1993 is concerned, the current licences issued to fishermen are valid for the 1992 calendar year. New licences and new quota management arrangements will be in place for the 1993 calendar year, and fishermen will be notified in due course of the arrangements which will pertain to that year.

Cattle

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new restrictions on trading cattle, calves or beef from the United Kingdom, have been introduced by other European countries during 1992.

Mr. Soames: This information is not yet available. I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Bacteria

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grants have been made to the national collections of industrial and marine bacteria in each year since 1988; what grant is proposed to be made for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Under a five-year agreement made in 1988, this Department has made the following contributions towards the work of the National Collections of Industrial and Marine Bacteria (NCIMB) Ltd:

January-March 1988	39,897
1988-89	142,983
1989-90	154,100
1990-91	167,708
1991-92	184,279
1992-93	197-325

The possibility of providing further support for an additional year is currently under consideration.

Agricultural Returns

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the requests he has received from within the United Kingdom for agricultural returns to be set out in hectares rather than acres; and if he will make a statement on the application of the principle of subsidiarity in considering a change from acres to hectares.

Mr. Curry: All agricultural census and survey returns, grant application and claim forms sent out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are already set out in hectares. Requests for these returns to be sent out in hectares rather than acres would be redundant.

Sea Defences

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the prospects for sea defence, coast protection and land drainage schemes in Suffolk and Norfolk in 1993-94 in the light of the autumn statement.

Mr. Curry: Previous plans for coast protection and the National Rivers Authority's flood defence works in England have been maintained, indicating the Government's continuing commitment to reduce risks to life and to the environment. Minor reductions have been made to bring plans for local authority and internal drainage board flood defence more closely in line with actual spending in recent years.

An allocation for capital works of £7·0 million is being made to the National Rivers Authority for Norfolk and Suffolk. The basic rate of grant remains at 55 per cent., with a 20 per cent. supplement for tidal and sea defence work.

Provision is also available for grants to local authorities, internal drainage boards and maritime district councils in England for flood and coastal defence works. Schemes proposed by such authorities in Norfolk and Suffolk will be considered for approval and grant aid by the Department in the normal way.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Derek Strain

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the case of Mr. Derek Strain's application for a disability living allowance was first raised with the disability living allowance unit; and when the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford, can expect a reply from the Benefits Agency's correspondence section.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. As the claim is a personal and confidential matter, he will reply direct to the hon. Member.

Independent Living Fund

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the amount of money to be transferred from his Department to local authorities to compensate disabled people for the loss of the independent living fund in April 1993.

Mr. Scott: There are no funds to transfer to local authorities from this Department for this purpose.

European Court

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases in the European Court of Justice have been won by his Department in the last five years.

Mr. Burt: In the last years only two cases against the Secretary of State for Social Security have been referred to the European Court of Justice. Judgment was given this year in both cases and in each the court ruled in favour of this Department.

Charter Safeguards

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what extra charter safeguards he envisages to protect the dignity of those who receive state benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: We do not plan any extra charter safeguards. The Benefits Agency customer charter gives a commitment to treat all customers courteously and with respect as well as delivering benefits speedily and accurately. A refurbishment programme to upgrade public caller areas to provide increased privacy, comfort and convenience is under way. More than half of the offices will have been upgraded by the spring.

Claimants in Hospital

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the basis for the setting of the benefit level for people with no dependents after one year in hospital at £10·85 per week; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: For recipients of most social security benefits who have no dependents and have been in hospital for more than one year, the amount paid is equivalent to 20 per cent. of the basic rate of retirement pension.

We consider this amount to be sufficent to meet the personal needs of long-stay hospital in-patients for minor items not provided by the hospital such as newspapers and confectionery.

Claimants of No Fixed Abode

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of (a) sickness benefit, (b) invalidity benefit and (c) income support are receiving giro cheques over office counters because they are of no fixed abode.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

ENVIRONMENT

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the last three years; for each of the last three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My Department commissioned 320 reports from external consultants in 1989-90; 391 in 1990-91 and 457 in 1991-92. For the convenience of the hon. Member, I have placed in the Library of the House separate lists of the reports for each of these years. Information concerning subsequent work commissioned as a result of these reports could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Halons

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish halon banks to assist in the recovery and recycling of halon.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are working closely with the fire industry and halon users on ways in which halon banking in the United Kingdom can be facilitated and are also playing an active role both within the EC and internationally on discussions on banking.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ban the production and import of halons into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The parties to the Montreal protocol are currently meeting in Copenhagen to discuss the phase out of ozone-depleting substances, including halons. The United Kingdom, together with its EC partners, is calling for production of halons to be phased out by the end of 1994 at the latest except for continued production for essential use.

Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has made to the Government of Greece concerning membership of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species.

Mr. Maclean: We and other EC partners have regularly urged the Greek Government to become a party to CITES. I am pleased to say, however, that the Greek Government have passed a law enabling Greece to ratify CITES, and formally become a party to the convention on 6 January 1993.

Ultra-violet Radiation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current system of UVB monitoring; and what plans he has for improvements.

Mr. Maclean: The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) has carried out continuous monitoring of ultraviolet radiation in the United Kingdom for three and a half years.

The Department of the Environment has supported the spectral measurement of ultraviolet radiation at Reading university for two and a half years. It is planned to continue this programme.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to enable the National Radiological Protection Board to purchase equipment that is capable of detecting the levels of UVB increase resulting from present ozone depletion.

Mr. Maclean: Spectral radiometers have the potential for detection of increases in UVB that may result from ozone depletion. The Department of the Environment has supported the spectral measurement of UVB at Reading university since 1989 and will continue to do so. There is no plan at the moment to support the purchase of identical equipment for the National Radiological Protection Board.

UN Conventions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make representations to the Secretary General of the United Nations seeking clarification on the compliance arrangements and verification procedures for (a) the framework convention on climate change and (b) the convention on biological diversity.

Mr. Maclean: The intergovernmental negotiating committee will resume its work next month to elaborate the framework convention on climate change and prepare for decisions at the first meeting of its parties.

Subject to approval by the United Nations Environment Programme's Governing Council in May 1993, an intergovernmental committee on the convention on biology diversity will be established. In the interim, UNEP will establish official level working groups to take forward the necessary further work on the convention.

Packaging

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken by his Department to date upon the implementation of (a) waste-reducing packaging design and (b) the introduction of landfill and packaging taxation.

Mr. Maclean: (a) None. The Government believe that it is in industry's own commercial interest to undertake research and introduce techniques and technologies to minimise the quantity of packaging and other material which ends up as waste.

(b) The Government have commissioned studies on the use of economic instruments for recycling and on landfill charges.

Council House Sales

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it hs policy to ensure that the proceeds from council house sales, including capital receipts currently set aside, are earmarked for the development of new social housing within each local authority area.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his autumn statement a relaxation of the rules governing the use by local authorities of their capital receipts. In consequence, authorities are able to spend 100 per cent. of most capital receipts generated between 13 November 1992 and 31 December 1993.

This initiative will proceed in conjunction with our plans for a capital partnership in England between central and local government to enhance the value for money from these substantial extra resources. These proposals represent an opportunity for the provision of additional new social housing, particularly through the sponsorship by local authorities of housing association development, as well as for substantial new expenditure on the renovation of existing housing.

Recycling

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to oblige shops and offices to collect their waste paper and cardboard for recycling.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans to do so at present.

Solid Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish targets for the reduction of solid waste production within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The Government advise industry on how to reduce and minimise waste; however, we have no plans to set targets at present.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his original estimates for local authorities' capital receipts, showing for each authority both gross receipts and usable receipts and showing separately housing receipts for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94.

Mr. Howard: I have not made any estimates of these receipts at the level of individual local authorities. Local authorities have provided their own forecasts of the receipts they expect to receive during 1992-93. I am arranging for this information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his latest estimate for each local authority of (a) the gross receipts from (i) housing and (ii) other assets from 1 April to 12 November, (b) the gross receipts from (i) housing and (ii) other assets from 13 November to 31 March 1993, (c) the gross receipts from (i) housing and (ii) other assets from 1 April 1993 to 31 December 1993 and (d) the gross receipts from (i) housing and (ii) other asets from 1 January 1994 to 31 March 1994.

Mr. Howard: I have not made any estimates of these receipts at the level of individual local authorities.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many applications for gipsy sites have been turned down since the Caravan Sites Act 1968 became law;

(2) if he will list the locations of the gipsy sites established since 1968, indicating (a) which were subject to public inquiries and (b) in which ones the local authority concerned applied for outline planning permission first before applying for detailed planning permission;

(3) how many gipsy sites have been established in England and Wales since the Caravan Sites act 1968 became law.

Mr. Baldry: Information is not available in the form requested. In January 1992 there were 306 local authority gipsy sites in England and Wales acommodating nearly 6,000 gipsy caravans, and nearly 3,000 caravans on authroised private sites. I have placed in the Library a copy of the Department's list of local authority gipsy sites in England, as at January 1992, compiled from data supplied by local authorities.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total number of occupied caravan sites by local authority area, which would be affected by legislation implementing the proposals of the 1992 consultation paper on the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Baldry: The consultation paper states that the Government expect existing gipsy caravan sites to continue in being.

North-East Atlantic (Discharges)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the Government are taking to ensure the new levels of discharges, agreed in Paris in the new convention to protect the north-east Atlantic, can be met.

Mr. Maclean: The new convention to protect the marine environment of the north-east Atlantic does not itself set any "new levels of discharges". The Government and the regulatory authorities will be using the powers at their disposal to fulfil obligations established under the convention and its predecessors.

Land Quality Statements

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that all planning applications are accompanied by land quality statements.

Mr. Baldry: The relationship between a proposed development and the quality of land affected can be material to decisions on planning applications, and local planning authorities have powers to ensure they obtain all the information they need to take proper decisions.

Water Supplies (Contamination)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the incidence of bacterial contamination of water supplies in each of the last five years in each of the areas covered by the present water companies.

Mr. Maclean: Information on drinking water quality in England and Wales during 1990 and 1991 is contained in the annual reports of the chief inspector, the drinking water inspectorate, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Information on earlier years is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Castle Vale Housing Action Trust

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision on the future of the proposed Castle Vale housing action trust, Birmingham.

Mr. Baldry: An announcement on the proposal for a housing action trust on the Castle Vale estate in Birmingham will be made once the assessment of the feasibility work is complete.

Water Companies (Safeguards)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the memorandum on safeguards in the operation and management of public waterworks still applies to the privatised water companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The memorandum has been replaced by "Operational Guidelines for the Protection of Drinking Water Supplies", published in 1988 by, and obtainable from, the Water Services Association. The advice given is not mandatory. It complements the legal requirement to provide wholesome water.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has carried out in the last five years into the possibility of cross contamination in the water industry.

Mr. Maclean: During the last five years, the Department has commissioned two research projects about backflow which could lead to contamination of water supplies. The first, which started in 1988, is to evaluate the degree of protection afforded by a range of mechanical devices designed to prevent backflow. The second, which started recently, is to study information on events which might lead to backflow. Both are due for completion in March 1993.

Water Charges

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the method of basing water charges on the rateable value of properties.

Mr. Maclean: Following the publication of my right hon. Friend's paper, "Using Water Wisely", we have received numerous representations about the possible bases for calculating water charges, including on the use of property values.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations his Department has carried out into the possible methods of charging for water and sewerage services.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has co-funded with the water industry 11 of the national water metering trials. Following widespread consultation, the Director General of Water Services has issued guidance to water companies about the development of their charging strategies. It is now for each water company to decide on its preferred method of charging in the light of the circumstances in its area, subject to legal limitations such as the obligation to avoid discriminatory charges and the prohibition on using rateable values after the year 2000.

Leasehold Properties

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each housing authority in England the total number of leasehold properties.

Mr. Baldry: No information is held centrally on the total number of leasehold properties in each local authority area.

Local Government (Legislation)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the public Acts of Parliament passed since the general election of 1979 which have affected the duties, powers and responsibilities of local government.

Council Tax

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what comparisons he is able to make, nationally and district by district, between levels of council tax and the levels which would have been necessary for domestic rates for 1993-94.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 20 November 1992]: The average domestic rate bill in England for 1993-94, based on 1989-90 rate bills uprated by the GDP deflator, would have been £637. But I intend to make no predictions of council tax levels for 1993-94. These are a matter for individual local authorities.

Derelict Land

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of England's population live in (a) derelict land clearance areas and (b) assisted areas.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 16 November 1992]: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the travel-to-work areas that are derelict land clearance areas but not assisted areas.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Derelict land clearance areas are not defined by travel to work area. The following travel to work areas include areas which have been designated as derelict land clearance areas and which are not assisted areas.

Climate Change

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) of 27 October, Official Report, column 540, when he now expects the United Kingdom to ratify the treaty on climate change agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 November 1992]: The position has not changed since my answer to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) on 27 October, Official Report, column 540.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General what documents were given by the Law Officers' Departments to HM Customs and Excise before it prosecuted Matrix Churchill; on what dates the documents were given; what was the source of any such documents provided; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: On 3 December 1990 Sir Hal Miller, then my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove, wrote to me enclosing documents supplied to him by The Sunday Times about the affairs of Matrix Churchill. The company was then the subject of a continuing investigation by HM Customs and Excise to which the documents were forwarded on the 4 December 1990 in accordance with the usual arrangements for transfer of correspondence.

Inquiries have been made in all the Law Officers' Departments, but no further documents have been located which were received and passed to HM Customs and Excise prior to the institution of proceedings relating to Matrix Churchill.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the organisations and individuals he has (a) consulted and (b) invited to submit comments, suggestions or representations about the future structure and funding of police authorities in England and Wales; when their reports were received or are expected; and what process of consultation and discussion he intends to undertake.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No formal consultations have taken place nor have comments formally been invited. If changes are proposed, consultation will take place with those directly concerned.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the individuals outside his Department who are advising his Department on the future structure and funding of police authorities in England and Wales; when their reports were received or are expected; and what process of consultation and discussion he intends to undertake.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 23 November 1992]: It is Ministers, not officials, who are responsible for policy. It does not seem appropriate to give the names of individual officials advising Ministers when it is Ministers, not officials, who are responsible for decisions on policy. If changes are proposed, consultation will take place with those directly concerned.

Drugs

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people aged (a) 16 to 21 years, (b) 22 to 30 years and (c) 31 to 45 years were arrested for possession of crack cocaine in (i) London and (ii) Wales in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The table shows the number of people who have been dealt with for offences involving crack cocaine in London in 1990, 1991 and 1992. There were no persons dealt with in Wales in any year. Figures for actual arrest are not collected centrally.

Persons dealt with for offences involving "crack" London (Metropolitan and City police districts)

Up to 21 years	6	9	6
22—30 years	19	31	25
Over 31 years	10	30	23
Total	35	70	54

[1] So far recorded.

Young Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Her Majesty's prison Manchester will be used for young people awaiting allocation to a young offender institution once it becomes fully operational.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no immediate plans to use Manchester prison for this purpose, but the invitation to tender issued in connection with the market testing of the establishment covers the possibility of its holding young prisoners.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington of 7 August and 24 August about the growth of juvenile crime in the mid-Warwickshire area.

Mr. Jack: I shall write to my hon. Friend this week.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now refer the conviction of Mr. Colin Wallace for the manslaughter of Jonathan Lewis to the Court of Appeal for review.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend has the power under section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 to refer a conviction to the Court of Appeal; but he would normally do so only if presented with new evidence or a consideration of substance which had not been before the courts and which appeared to cast doubt on the safety of the conviction. Since my right hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) wrote to the hon. Member on 30 June 1990, no representations claiming to have identified such evidence or other consideration of substance has been made to the Home Office.

Police (Court Attendance)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many man-hours were used by police officers attending courts in (a) Carlisle and (b) Cumbria in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what proportion of total police man-hours this represented in each year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

HM Inspector of Police

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each regional crime squad in England and Wales the dates on which each has been inspected by Her Majesty's inspector of police in each year since 1980.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All the information requested is not readily available, but I will write to the hon. Member.

Prison Officers (Name Badges)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department as to the wearing of a name badge by prison officers working in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The procurement process through competitive tendering has commenced in order that name badges will be provided for every member of the prison service by 1 April 1993. As from that date all staff, including prison officers, coming into contact with prisoners or the public will be required when they do so to wear name badges. Further, staff will be encouraged to wear name badges in any circumstances where it will be useful or courteous to do so. This policy is in accord with the citizens charter, the report by Lord Justice Woolf and the White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice".

The wearing of name badges will be a tangible sign of the shared commitment by all employed in the Home Office prison service to deliver a quality public service.

Police (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of police officers of each rank are from the ethnic minorities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is as follows.

	Per cent.
Chief Constable	0·00
Deputy Chief Constable	0·00
Assistant Chief Constable	0·00
Chief Superintendent	0·18
Superintendent	0·20
Chief Inspector	0·17
Inspector	0·34
Sergeant	0·47
Constable	1·65

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the police are from ethnic minorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The percentage of police officers in England and Wales from ethnic minorities on 31 August 1992 was 1·34 per cent.

Vulnerable Prisoner Units

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision exists for vulnerable prisoner sections in custodial centres for persons under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no formally designated sections within juvenile units for vulnerable persons. Under rule 46(1) of the Young Offender Institutions Rules 1988, the governor may arrange for an inmate to be separated from others where this would be in his or her interest. But this would be unlikely to be a long-term solution to problems being faced by a vulnerable juvenile and the governor of the establishment would be concerned to find other means of providing protection, for example, by use of disciplinary procedures in respect of those using or threatening violence.

Crack

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seizures of the drug crack there were in the Northumbria police authority area in 1991.

Mr. Jack: There were no recorded seizures of the type of cocaine known as "crack" in the Northumbria police area during 1991.

Drug-related Offences

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of crimes committed while under the influence of drugs, in Blyth Valley and the Northumbria police authority area, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: It is not possible to estimate with any accuracy the number of crimes committed by offenders under the influence of drugs.

Young Offenders (Dyslexia)

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders in remand or prison institutions suffer with dyslexia.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Records of the number of young offenders with dyslexia are not held centrally. When young offenders are received into remand centres or young offender institutions, their educational needs are assessed. The aim is to help offenders prepare for their return to the community by providing a programme of activities including education, training and work.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what areas within the Northumbria police authority area have been identified as having the highest levels of drug abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I understand that Northumbria police judge that most drug misuse occurs within the major centres of population in the Tyne and Wear conurbation.

Prison Officers' Accommodation

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officer quarters at each of the London prisons were occupied by prison officers on November.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of prison quarters occupied by prison officers on 16 November 1992 in the six London prisons is as follows:

	Number
Belmarsh	[1]10
Brixton	154
Holloway	141
Pentonville	100

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the vehicle-related projects which were wholly or partly funded by his Department under the probation supervision grant scheme and the safer cities programme in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The list of projects is set out in the table. The 1992-93 section includes a recently approved scheme which is additional to the number quoted in my earlier reply of 26 October, at column 457, and my letter of 30 October to the hon. Member.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The information available is given in the table. Data for men and women separately, and on the country to which the person is deported, are not available.

Mr. Wardle: The Secretary of State for the Home Department will continue to report to the House on the decisions of Trevi Ministers by means of a written answer after each ministerial meeting. Any arrangements which need parliamentary approval will naturally be put to the House.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Review

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution his Department will be making to Her Majesty's Government's energy review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My officials are contributing fully to the work of the review.

Capital Receipts

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the amount of reserved part of capital receipts set aside as provision to meet credit liabilities but not yet used to redeem debt for each local authority and standard economic region and one total for England; and if he will place the information in the Library on floppy disk.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the total amount set aside as provision for credit liabilities at 31 March 1991, as reported by local authorities, has been placed in the Library of the House. Local authorities are not required to identify separately amounts originating from set-aside capital receipts.

Building Effects Review Group

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the action undertaken by his Department resulting from the United Kingdom buildings effects review group report published in 1989.

Mr. Maclean: A number of recommendations in the United Kingdom buildings effects review group report have been implemented. These include the setting up of the national materials exposure programme, the establishment of more urban pollution monitoring sites, the development of inventories of stock at risk for a range of economically important materials, work on air pollution effects on stained glass and the development of economic models to assess the costs of air pollution damage to buildings and materials. In addition, overall research on air pollution effects in a number of areas has been sustained as recommended in the BERG report.

Fire Extinguishers

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken in Government offices to replace fire extinguishers which use ozone-depleting substances; and when replacement will be completed.

Mr. Maclean: It is my Department's policy to avoid the use of fire extinguishers which use ozone-depleting substances. All portable halon fire extinguishers in DOE buildings have been replaced by ozone-friendly alternatives. Other departments have been advised to follow a similar policy with a view to phasing out the use of ozone-depleting substances as soon as is practically possible and within the time scale set out by the Montreal protocol and other international agreements.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining compensation payment levels to be granted following the appearance of a piece of land on the newly established contaminated land register.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have no plans for compensation in respect of land included on the proposed local authority registers of land which may be contaminated.

Audit Fees

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities on the level and percentage rise of audit fees charged to local authorities by the Audit Commission.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have received a number of representations from parish councils about the cost of the requirement for regular audit. I have received no representations from local authorities about the rate of audit fees as such, or about the percentage rise of audit fees.

Urban Regeneration Agency

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of Barnsley as a possible location for the urban regeneration agency.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities gave in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates) on 11 November, Official Report, columns 789-90.

Orimulsion

Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name the power stations which have applied to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to burn orimulsion.

Mr. Maclean: The chief inspector of Her Majesty' inspectorate of pollution has received two applications under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 from National Power to burn orimulsion in its power stations at Pembroke and Padiham. He has also received two applications under that Act from PowerGen to burn orimulsion in its power stations at Ince and Richborough.

Rents

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure that rent levels required by housing associations do not increase above the level of inflation.

Mr. Baldry: For tenants of registered housing associations whose tenancies commenced after 15 January 1989, rents are set by each individual housing association in accordance with its overall rent policy.

For tenants of registered housing associations whose tenancy began before 15 January 1989 rents are set by the rent officer under the Rent Act 1977. The rent officer will take into account the age, character, locality and state of repair of a dwelling while disregarding any shortage of similar accommodation in the area.

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what way allocations to local authorities under the revenue support grant settlement and capital approvals take account of allocations to individual local authorities under European structural fund programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: European structural fund programmes do not provide specific allocations for individual local authorities. European regional development fund receipts are not take into account, therefore, in determining revenue support grant settlements. Local authorities do, however, receive capital approvals to provide public expenditure cover for European regional development fund receipts, which from 1993-94 will be automatic.

Bathing Water

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify the beaches in the north-west of England that failed to meet the bathing water quality standard during 1992.

Mr. Maclean: Bathing waters not meeting the standards for coliform bacteria in 1992 were Southport, St. Anne's (2), Blackpool (3), Bispham, Cleveleys, Fleetwood, Heysham, Morecambe (2), Bardsea, Newbiggin, Roan Head, Askam, Haverigg, Seascale, St. Bees, Allonby (2) and Skinburness.

Urban Programme

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from local authorities affected by the announcement on 13 November that there would be no more new starts under the urban programme.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend and other Ministers have received a few representations from local authorities about the arrangements set out in my letter of 13 November to urban programme authority leaders for an urban partnership fund, which will use uncommitted urban programme money alongside local authority capital receipts and other resources to promote urban regeneration.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (i) if he will list those authorities eligible for urban programme funding (a) that are also in receipt of successful city challenge project allocation, (b) that put forward city challenge projects which failed and (c) that did not bid for city challenge;

(2) if he will list the local authorities in England that received an allocation from the urban programme this year.

Mr. Robin Squire: Tables 1 and 2 list successful and unsuccessful city challenge authorities. Taken together, the tables list all 57 authorities which received an urban programme allocation in 1992-93.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his present estimate of urban programme allocation for 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 (a) nationally, (b) for each region and (c) by urban programme authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: (a) The public expenditure provision of the urban programme is £237 million in 1992-93, £176 million in 1993-94 and £91 million 1994-95. This will allow us to fund existing commitments in future years and provide an additional £20 million in 1993-94 for projects as part of capital partnership.

(b) The 1992-93 provision includes the urban crime fund initiative. The main urban programme provision for each region for 1992-93 is set out in the table.

	£ million
Northern	36·520
North West	38·954
Merseyside	28·285
West Midlands	35·488
East Midlands	9·913
Yorkshire and Humberside	25·997
London	43·172
South West	2·665

In addition, local authorities contribute 25 per cent. of the cost of revenue projects, estimated at about £16 million, and will receive £11 million for projects supported by district health authorities from the Department of Health. Regional allocations for future years have not yet been made.

(c) For initial allocations to urban programme authorities for 1992-93, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 5 June, Official Report, column 666.

Industrial Improvement Grant

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many industrial improvement area grant schemes will finish in March 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available in the form requested. Individual and commercial improvment area grants often form part of larger block projects which cannot easily be disaggregated.

Radiation

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's comparative assessment of the annual radiation exposure to individuals from (i) natural background radiation in the environment, (ii) iodine 125 discharged from hospitals in sewers, (iii) iodine 125 in drinking water and (iv) krypton 85 discharges from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant received by the public in the vicinity of Sellafield.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 20 November 1992]: (i) Exposure of individuals to natural background radiation is kept under review by the National Radiological Protection Board. An NRPB report published in 1989 gave the average effective dose from background radiation to the United Kingdom population as 2,200 microsieverts per year.

(ii) NRPB estimated the effective dose to sewer workers from iodine 125 to be 1·2 microsieverts per year.

(iii) A study by St. Bartholomew's medical school funded by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution found the effective dose to the public from iodine 125 in drinking water to be in the range 0 to 7 microsieverts per year.

(iv) The THORP plant is not operational. However, the effective dose from krypton 85 emissions from THORP under proposed discharge limits contained in draft authorisations recently published by HMIP would not exceed 6·4 microsieverts per year to members of the critical group in the Sellafield area.

For comparison, the International Commission on Radiological Protection has recommended a limit on effective doses from man-made sources—other than doses received by a patient undergoing medical treatment—for members of the public of 1,000 microsieverts per year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work has been undertaken within his Department on the effect of the Labour party's proposals for domestic rates and the Liberal Democrat proposals for local income tax; and at what cost.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Both the Labour party's proposals for "fair rates" and the Liberal Democrat proposals for a local income tax were considered thoroughly during the review of local government finance in 1991 and throughout the passage of the Local Government Finance Bill.

The annual cost of the local government review was estimated to be some £1 million. It is not possible to segregate the costs of work of considering some proposals rather than others during the course of that review and the Committee stages of the Bill.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Fees

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage increase is planned for each type of court fee; when such increases are proposed to take effect; and what is the estimate of the additional income arising from the fee increase.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The County Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1992, which comes into force on 30 November 1992, and 1 April 1993 in respect of proceedings under the Road Traffic Act 1991, revises the fees payable for proceedings in the county court. This is the first increase since 1986. There will be no immediate increases in other court fees, but all fee rates are kept under regular review. The percentage increase in individual county court fees is set out in the table. It is estimated that the additional income arising from the fee increase will be approximately £55 million in a full year, bringing the civil courts considerably closer to their target for covering their costs.

County Courts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases have been dealt with by county courts for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: During the 12 months from November 1991 to October 1992, the county courts of England and Wales issued 3,211,281 default cases of which 76,564 were disposed of by arbitration and 26,980 by trial. A further 2,042,127 judgments were entered in default or on acceptance of an admission. In addition, a further 402,925 other actions were issued by county courts including summonses for possession of land and return of goods.

EDUCATION

Community Care

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the importance to the development of community care policies of two new degree courses in learning disabilities that were officially launched on 16 November.

Mr. Forman: The two new degree courses to be run at Stockport college of further and higher education and King Alfred's college aim to develop the knowledge and skills of those who work in the provision of services for people with learning disabilities. The courses constitute part of the overall training provision for the caring professions offered by educational institutions throughout the country. The Government welcome the development of such provision, which has an important part to play in ensuring that those who work at all levels in community care have opportunities to acquire the necessary skills.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations have been received from Manchester's chief education officer in reply to the letter sent to him by Mr. D. M. Forrester of his Department on 3 November concerning applications from schools for grant-maintained status; what reply is being sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Manchester city council's chief education officer has responded to the Department's letter of 3 November making a number of points. A reply will be sent to the CEO shortly.

Examination League Tables

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many specific errors in the league table of school examination results were reported to his Department within the first 48 hours of publication.

Mr. Forth: Within the first 48 hours the Department had received 52 complaints; during this time, only two complaints were substantiated, one of which was a spelling mistake. The press were notified as soon as those errors came to light and erratum slips have been sent out with the tables concerned.

The other complaints did not reveal errors on the part of the Department or its contractors. The schools concerned had in many cases supplied the information they were complaining about; others had not asked for any changes, had asked for unacceptable changes, had not sent in the necessary evidence, or sent it in too late; one was complaining about a newspaper error which misquoted the tables.

Pupils

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Education if he will list for the most recent date for which information is available, the number and proportion of pupils in each local education authority educated outside the local education authority, and the proportion which resides outside the local education authority, in rank order by the net pupil inflow.

Mr. Forth: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Regulatory Measures

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Education if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April.

Mr. Forth: The wide-ranging reforms of school inspection put into effect by the Education (Schools) Act 1992 will involve the regulation of registered inspectors by Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, in order to maintain quality assurance. No other new regulatory measures have been put into effect in the Department's area of responsibility.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Education if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April.

Mr. Forth: There have been no such measures of deregulation.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Education which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Forth: I have the responsibility for these matters in the Department.

Mature Students

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of students in higher education were classed as mature in each year since 1979.

Mr. Forman: The percentages of first-year students on higher education courses in further and higher education institutions in Great Britain classified as mature are shown in the table.

	Per cent.
1979	40·0
1980	42·6
1981	42·4
1982	42·0
1983	44·0
1984	44·0
1985	46·7
1986	49·3
1987	48·7
1988	50·5
1989	49·8
1990	50·6

Note:
Mature students are defined as those enrolling on the 1st year of a 1st degree or undergraduate course at age 21 or over, or on a postgraduate course at age 25 or over.

Special Education Needs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to ensure access to local education authority psychological services for further education students who have special educational needs and who need special examination arrangements for GCSE and A-level equal to that provided by local education authorities for students in sixth forms at schools.

Mr. Forman: It is for the Further Education Funding Council to decide how to secure such support services, including psychological services, as are needed by students with learning difficulties in the new further education sector, for which the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 provides. The council intends to issue guidance on this to colleges in due course.

Books

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to ring fence funding for books in the allocation of resources to local education authorities.

Mr. Forth: No. It remains our policy that it is for local authorities to decide what expenditure, within the resources available to them, to devote to the services for which they are responsible; and for schools under delegated management to decide how to deploy their budgets among teaching costs, other staff costs, and non-pay costs such as books.

Corporal Punishment

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the level of costs and compensation paid in respect of the recent case before the European Court of Human Rights, relating to corporal punishment; and what are the reasons for making the settlement.

Mr. Forth: The applicant received £8,000 compensation and agreed costs totalling £11,368. It is common practice for the parties to litigation to attempt to reach a settlement out of court.

Vocational Courses

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the criteria he uses to determine whether a vocational course should qualify for mandatory grants.

Mr. Forman: The Education Act 1962 permits my right hon. Friend to designate, for mandatory student awards, only those full-time and sandwich courses which lead to a first degree or comparable qualification, or to a DipHE or HND, and courses of initial teacher training. His present policy is to designate most courses which fall within those categories. Where, however, a course is a candidate for specific designation on an individual basis—for example, as a course provided by an institution other than a university and leading to a qualification comparable to a first degree—it is considered in the light of all the relevant factors.

University Academic Staff (Pay)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education by how much university academic staff pay has increased since 1979; and what was the average pay level for such staff at 1 April.

Mr. Forman: Between December 1979 and April 1992 the average pay of academic staff in the universities supported by the Universities Funding Council in Great Britain rose by just under 20 per cent. in real terms, as measured by the retail prices index. The Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals estimate that the average pay for a university lecturer as at 1 April this year was £22,894.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Forman: There are no current plans to privatise or contract out any agencies in my Department. However, this issue is reconsidered periodically as part of my Department's normal review process, as explained in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South East (Mr. Paice) on 17 November 1992, Official Report, column 104.

TRANSPORT

Ferry Ships (Safety)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will make a statement on the safety of ferry ships.

Mr. Steven Norris: The Government consider that all ro-ro passenger ferries should be required to meet the full safety of life at sea—SOLAS '90—standard for damage stability. Despite intensive efforts, it has not so far proved possible to secure sufficient international support for implementation of the full SOLAS '90 standard on existing vessels over a reasonable time scale. We will continue to seek support in the International Maritime Organisation for an amendment to the convention. Meanwhile, we are considering alternative ways of achieving the same objective for vessels using United Kingdom ports.

General Register and Record Office of Shipping and Seamen

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received against the privatisation of the General Register and Record Office of Shipping and Seamen from (a) shipping interests, (b) seafarers and their representatives, (c) historians and researchers, (d) artists and others concerned with depicting Britain's maritime heritage and (e) families and descendants of those who have served at sea during the existence of the register.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is as follows:

(a)	0
(b)	2
(c)	3
(d)	0
(e)	0

Rail Services (Disabled People)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received (a) from disabled people and (b) organisations concerned with the welfare of disabled people, in regard to the preservation or enhancement of provision of rail services, access to rail services and cost of rail services for disabled people; and what response he has made.

Mr. Freeman: I receive representations on these matters from time to time both from disabled people and groups which represent them.

The BR board has had a policy commitment for a number of years to improve access and facilities for disabled passengers whenever possible. It has an advisory group on disability which is consulted in advance of major decisions on either station development or rolling stock design.

I know that BR provides discounts for disabled passengers, but the detail of such discounts is for BR to decide.

For the future, our privatisation proposals envisage a duty on the rail regulator to take into account the interests of persons with disabilities, which would be reflected in obligations imposed on railway operators through the regulator's licensing regime.

Rail Electrification

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what national safety standards are set for the diameter of the current carrying overhead wire used for railway electrification, giving the largest and smallest permitted diameters.

Mr. Freeman: The electrification equipment used by BR generally conforms to the appropriate British or UIC standards. Stranded wires of diameters between 10 and 22 mm and solid contact wires of between 12·3 and 14·5 mm diameter are currently used. The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate issues standards for the safe use of this electrical equipment.

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who, in his Department, has been appointed to oversee and develop green issues; how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in his Department.

Mr. MacGregor: As the Department of Transport's Green Minister, I am personally responsible for overseeing its environmental work. This work is co-ordinated and developed by the transport policy unit which was set up in 1989.

Conserving the environment is one of the main aims of transport policy and is an aspect of many of the Department's activities. It is not therefore possible to specify the precise number of people or resources in my Department concerned with green issues.

Nuclear Material

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the full text of the United Kingdom delegation's statement to the recent International Maritime Organisation marine environment protection committee in connection with the transport by sea of nuclear materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The report of the marine environment protection committee on its 33rd session, held between 26 and 30 October 1992, will reflect the oral contribution made by the United Kingdom delegation during the plenary session. A copy of that report will be placed in the Library when it is available.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he will be represented at the forthcoming joint International Atomic Energy Agency—International Maritime Organisation—United Nations Environment Programme working group on the transport of irradiated nuclear fuel, at the International Maritime Organisation maritime safety committee on 7 to 11 December.

Mr. Norris: The Department will be represented by specialists in the transport of irradiated nuclear fuel.

Bus Companies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to offer cash incentives for bus companies to develop full access to vehicles for disabled people.

Mr. Freeman: It is for bus operators to make their own decisions on the purchase of vehicles. Local authorities may assist operators in the purchase or equipment of vehicles to facilitate travel by members of the public who are disabled. My Department is supporting two low-floor bus demonstration projects, one inside London and one elsewhere; and we shall be evaluating their costs and benefits.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, column 86 to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), what ozone-friendly alternatives were considered in the construction of the channel tunnel; if he will recommend that the bi-national intergovernmental commission and safety authority reconsider the use of ozone-destroying substances in the sealed tunnel cooling system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: At present no suitable ozone-friendly substances have been developed, although it is envisaged that advances in fire extinguishing and cooling substances will eventually allow Eurotunnel to replace the materials now available. As indicated in my answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury, Eurotunnel has been required to design a cooling system to accept without great modification the possible replacement of HCFC 22 by more ozone-friendly fluids which become available.

Rail Services (Franchising)

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many responses he has received to his consultation document "The Franchising of Passenger Rail Services" from those with an interest either as a franchisee or lessor.

Mr. Freeman: Responses to the consultation document have included 48 expressing interest in operating passenger franchises and nine in leasing rolling stock.

Freight Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the estimated targets established by his Department for the proportion of freight tonnage to be transported through combined road-rail transport means by the year 2000.

Mr. Freeman: The Department neither sets any such targets nor makes any such estimates. The extent to which consignors of freight use combined transport will depend on what services are available and on their cost, reliability and speed relative to carriage by other means.

Public Service Obligation Payments

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to amend the current public service obligation rules to allow payments to be made in respect of individual railway lines.

Mr. Freeman: Amendments to the present rules will be made with the introduction of the franchising of passenger rail services.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing Investment

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of United Kingdom gross domestic product was earned from manufacturing investment in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates of manufacturing investment and gross domestic product may be obtained from the Central Statistical Office database accessible through the House of Commons Library.

Offshore Companies

Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the tax avoided by intellectual property contracts with offshore companies entered into by United Kingdom companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The United Kingdom has long-established transfer-pricing legislation to counteract international tax avoidance generally, which would include tax avoided in relation to such contracts. Where cases of international tax avoidance are identified, these are in the main handled by a small specialist section within the Inland Revenue, which in 1991-92 recovered an additional £123 million in tax from its investigations generally.

Export Controls

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contribution Her Majesty's Customs and Excise Department will make to the forthcoming seminar being held by the Export Control Organisation on a practical guide to United Kingdom export controls.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise regularly participate in seminars organised by the Export Control Organisation on United Kingdom export controls. Such a seminar was held on Friday 20 November with Customs and Excise participation.

National Income Accounts

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to adjust national income accounts and gross national product calculations to take account of natural resource usage and pollution.

Mr. Nelson: The national accounts, compiled by the Central Statistical Office, measure economic activity in a clearly defined way in line with international recommendations. Development of methods of evaluating environmental factors in an economic accounting framework to complement the national accounts is also being encouraged by international organisations. For a number of reasons, however, not least the difficulty of putting monetary values on environmental factors, the development of integrated environmental and economic accounts is particularly difficult. The Central Statistical Office will be publishing an article on this subject, with illustrative statistics, in the November issue of "Economic Trends".

Pensioners' Price Index

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his best estimate of the annual cost of calculating the pensioners' price index.

Mr. Nelson: The estimated annual cost of the two price indices for pensioner households, which are produced as a by-product of the retail prices index, is approximately £4,000.

Whisky

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how far the income from duties on whisky has fallen in real terms since 1983-84.

Sir John Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 17 November 1992, Official Report, column 118.

Friendly Societies Commission

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the full-time and part-time commissioners appointed to the Friendly Societies Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Derek Lee is chairman of the Friendly Societies Commission and a full-time commissioner.

The part-time commissioners are:

Mr. Phillip Couse
Dr. Janet Dine
Mr. Anthony Geddes
Mr. Alec Wilson

Mr. Lee and Mr. Wilson were appointed with effect from 22 July 1992 and Mr. Couse, Dr. Dine and Mr. Geddes were appointed on 1 October 1992.

Minimum Lending Rates

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to remove the freedom of clearing banks to set their own minimum lending rates.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to do so.

Interest Rates

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what level interest rates were set (a) in each of the 14 days prior to leaving the exchange rate mechanism and (b) in each of the 14 days afterwards.

Mr. Nelson: The information is as follows:

Clearing Banks' Base Rates[1]

1992	Rate
September 2—September 15	10
September 16	12
September 17—September 21	10
September 22—September 30	9

[1] Clearing banks do not necessarily all change their base lending rates on the same day.

Macroeconomic Forecasting

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he has taken to improve macroeconomic forecasting.

Mr. Lamont: I have introduced a number of measures. First, in my Mansion House speech on 29 October I announced my proposal to invite a number of independent forecasters to join a new forecasting panel. This will meet at regular intervals and then publish an assessment which will be used to inform Government policy decisions alongside the Treasury's own forecast.

Secondly, this year's autumn statement includes for the first time some details of how the Government's own economic forecast compares with the view other organisations have taken.

Thirdly, Treasury officials now regularly meet economists from industry to discuss current business conditions.

Fourthly, both I and my predecessor have taken steps to improve the quality of economic statistics on which forecasts are based.

Fifthly, efforts are being made to strengthen the analytical basis of Treasury forecasting.

Nevertheless, it is important to recognise that economic forecasts will always be subject to a considerable degree of uncertainty.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals are being considered to simplify the investigation and prosecution of insider dealing under one authority.

Mr. Nelson: Under existing legislation the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry may appoint inspectors to investigate suspected insider dealing. Prosecutions may be brought by or with the consent of the Secretary of State or the Director of Public Prosecutions. These arrangements are carried forward in the Criminal Justice Bill, currently in another place, which seeks to amend the law on insider dealing.

EC Budget

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement explaining the differences in the basis of calculation of the latest estimate of the United Kingdom's net Budget contribution to the EC in the pamphlet "Britain in Europe" and his statement to the House of 27 October, Official Report, column 572.

Sir John Cope: The estimate of £2,599 million given on 27 October was, as stated, that published in the "Statement on the 1992 Community Budget", Cm 1948, June 1992. This took account of the United Kingdom's gross contribution, public sector receipts and abatement received in 1992 in respect of 1991. The estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution in 1992 of £1·7 billion given in the pamphlet "Britain in Europe" takes account of the latest information on the United Kingdom's gross contribution, receipts to both the public and private sector and abatement in respect of contributions and payments made in 1992. This gives a better indication of the underlying level of the budgetary implications of Community membership for the UK as a whole.

Parcelforce

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the legal basis on which the activities of Parcelforce are exempt from VAT.

Sir John Cope: Supplies of postal services by Parcelforce are exempt under group 3 of schedule 6 to the VAT Act 1983.

Industrial Subsidies

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish details of subsidies in both monetary and real terms given to (a) agriculture and (b) mining for each year since 1979-80, including the latest forecast for 1992-93 and the estimates for 1993-94, for both industries in total and also for both industries on the basis of the amount of subsidy per worker.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 18 November 1992]: The tables provide figures only for central Government subsidies to agriculture from 1979-80 to 1991-92, and grant aid to the coal industry from 1979-80 to 1992-93. It is not possible to forecast the level of agricultural subsidies in 1992-93 and 1993-94, as expenditure depends to a considerable degree on unpredictable conditions. On mining, it is not possible to provide figures for the element of the external financing limit for 1993-94 published in the autumn statement which will be grant aid until decisions have been taken in the light of the coal review.

However, it should be made clear that a direct comparison of levels of subsidy to both industries cannot be inferred from the tables below. This is because both receive subsidies in addition to those funded from Government expenditure. In the case of agriculture, additional subsidies are provided by consumers, who pay higher food prices due to the guaranteed price support system of the common agricultural policy, though these cannot be quantified with any accuracy. In the case of the coal industry, additional support has been provided for British Coal through the high margins, over and above world market prices, that the electricity generators pay for their coal supplies from the corporation. Under present contracts, which have been operating since April 1990, this assistance has amounted to about £1 billion a year.

Taxation

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 17 December 1991 to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown), Official Report, column 121, to provide similar estimates of the burden of direct and indirect taxes for the years 1991-92 and 1992-93; and if he will publish any revisions for earlier years.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Although the 1991 family expenditure survey has now been published, estimation of the effects of the community charge on tax burdens requires further analysis of the data. I will write to the hon. Member with updated estimates as soon as this extra work has been carried out.

Company Car Tax

Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he plans to announce his conclusions on the reform of company car tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 20 November 1992]: It is normal to announce details of major income tax changes in the Budget statement.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total net receipt to Her Majesty's Treasury arising from premium bonds since the inception of the scheme.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 20 November 1992]: The balance outstanding as at end-October 1992 was £2·549 billion.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to increasing the top prize in premium bonds to £1 million.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The prize structure is kept under review. I have no present plans to make any changes.

Unemployment

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the sensitivity of his public sector borrowing requirement forecast for 1993-94 to an increase of unemployment of (a) 0·3 million, (b) 0·5 million and (c) 0.7 million.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The effect of an increase in unemployment on the public sector borrowing requirement depends on a large number of factors and assumptions, and cannot be reliably estimated. Estimates of the direct effect on expenditure on unemployment benefit, income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit are set out in figure 25 of DSS departmental report, Cm 1914.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reconsider the arrangements which lead to the imposition of VAT upon charges incurred in the care of the dependent elderly; and if he will seek to ensure that the United Kingdom is permitted such fiscal relief through derogation from the EC sixth VAT directive.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The United Kingdom has always exempted from VAT the supply of services by a person registered or enrolled in any of the medical or paramedical registers. The provision of care by a local authority or charity otherwise than for profit is also exempt from VAT. Domiciliary care and domestic help supplied on a commercial basis is in principle liable to VAT at the standard rate subject to the turnover of the supplier exceeding the small trader registration threshold. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no plans to seek any amendment of the law. The EC sixth VAT directive contains no provision for derogations of the type suggested by the hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Aujeszky's Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has consulted pig breeders' associations on the use of remaining funds raised through the Aujeszky's disease levy.

Mr. Soames: Pig industry representatives have explored various possibilities in discussion with my officials. But, as I informed industry organisations last week, it has been decided to use the remaining funds to support the continuing input necessary to maintain freedom from disease.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current situation with respect to Aujeszky's disease.

Mr. Soames: The last outbreak of Aujeszky's disease in Great Britain was in October 1989 and freedom from the disease was announced in May 1991. New animal health trade rules, designed to protect Great Britain's freedom from Aujeszky's disease, have now been agreed by the Community. We are satisfied that these will continue to protect our disease-free status.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Booth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Brussels on 23 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I chaired this meeting of the Council. The Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir Hector Monro), represented the United Kingdom.

The Council reached agreement on the general guidelines for the multi-annual guidance programmes to be set for 1993-96. These envisage cuts of up to 20 per cent. in demersal fleets, cuts of up to 15 per cent. for beam trawlers and a freeze in the size of pelagic fleets. Forty to 45 per cent. of the necessary cuts can be made by effort reductions. The detailed arrangements are to be agreed by the EC structures committee.

The Council agreed the arrangements for tariff quotas and suspensions for 1993. The 1993 support prices had already been agreed in principle prior to the Council.

The Council also discussed some of the main elements in the Commission's proposal for a replacement to the basic regulation for the common fisheries policy. There was general endorsement of the principle of relative stability and the need to continue the special access arrangements agreed in 1983, including the Shetland box. There are to be further expert discussions with a view to reaching final agreement on a new regulation at the December Council.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy for a total figure for the number of confirmed BSE cases to be deposited in the House and updated regularly.

Mr. Gummer: I have arranged for the cumulative total of confirmed BSE cases for each county or region in Great Britain to be placed in the Library of the House on a regular basis.

Set-aside Land

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish details of the amount of agricultural land currently being taken out of cultivation under the EC set-aside policy in each of the member countries.

Mr. Curry: The latest information available to this Department on the amount of land currently set aside in EC countries is set out. This covers only the voluntary five-year set-aside scheme which was introduced in 1988 and which is now closed to new entrants. New set-aside arrangements come into effect on 15 December, but it is not possible at this stage to say how much land will be set aside in 1992-93.

Estimated area of land in five year set-aside scheme

	Hectares
United Kingdom	150,854
Germany (excluding former GDR)	367,977
Netherlands	29,606
Belgium	873
France	266,575
Ireland	1,766
Spain	84,087
Greece	250
Italy	608,705
Luxembourg	90
Denmark	5,520
Total	1,516,303

Notes: Includes 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991 intakes into the five year set-aside scheme except for Greece—1989 only—Denmark—1990 only—and Spain and Italy—1991 not available. United Kingdom figures exclude 1991 withdrawals from 1988 intake. Former GDR land entered in the scheme in 1990 and 1991 estimated at 704,083 hectares.

Group Marketing Grants

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums have been awarded, and to what groups, under his Department's Ministry's group marketing grant scheme since 1 April.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry is responsible for administering the group marketing grant in England. Since the scheme began in April we have approved nine applications —to a total value of £170,482. The majority of these have been for first phase feasibility studies which may well lead in due course to further awards. It is not our practice to give details of individual groups without their agreement.

Common Agricultural Policy Reform

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he proposes to make a statement on the package of positive payments to encourage environmentally friendly activities included within common agricultural policy reform.

Mr. Curry: We propose to develop a new nitrate reduction programme especially where this is necessary to protect drinking water sources, a new scheme to encourage organic farming, a new scheme to reduce livestock numbers where this will be environmentally beneficial, measures to increase the environmental benefits of set-aside and payments to manage land for public access and recreation. Details of these proposals will be issued for consultation this winter. They are in addition to plans to introduce a series of new environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to announce the detailed implications and administrative arrangements resulting from common agricultural policy reform.

Mr. Curry: We have been providing information to farmers as quickly as possible as the detailed arrangements for implementing CAP reform have been agreed. All registered arable farmers were sent a booklet in September which set out detailed guidance on the operation of the reformed arable regime. Agreement has just been reached on the implementing regulation in the sheepmeat sector. Agreement has been reached on the integrated administration and control system regulations, but the detailed implementing rules have yet to be finalised.

Sand Dredging

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of reports held in his Department of the effects on the marine ecology of offshore sand dredging.

Mr. Curry: Progress reports on an investigation by the Ministry's directorate of fisheries research into the effects of aggregate dredging on the marine ecology are included in aquatic environment monitoring reports Nos. 26 and 30, copies of which are in the Library. Studies currently under way, funded in part by the Crown Estates Commissioners, are investigating the rates at which marine life re-colonises a dredged area. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library once this work is completed.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department holds on the impact of offshore sand dredging on coastal erosion and deposition.

Mr. Curry: Applications to dredge marine aggregates, including sand, are subject to a process known as the Government view procedure which is operated in England by the Department of the Environment. The process includes the commissioning of studies to ascertain the effects that the proposed dredging would have on the coastline. Consultations take place with all interested Government Departments—including the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—coast protection authorities and other interests. An application will not proceed unless there is a favourable Government view overall. The individual studies carried out are based on the best scientific and research information available, and should provide an adequate safeguard in relation to the potential impact of offshore dredging on coastal erosion and deposition.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the locations where his Department has been consulted in relation to offshore sand dredging in each of the last 10 years; for which sites he has given a positive response; for which sites he has given a negative response; and what estimates he has of the annual tonnage of sand that has been extracted from each working site.

Mr. Curry: The table shows the areas in respect of which applications were made to the Crown Estates for marine aggregate extraction licences in the period 1982-91, and the response finally given by this Department in each case. Some of these applications are still subject to consideration under the procedure. Information on quantities extracted each year are not made public by the Crown Estates for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to pay the maximum permitted levels of national supplements to the suckler cow premium.

Mr. Curry: No. As a result of common agricultural policy reform, premium rates for both suckler cows and male beef animals will rise significantly between now and 1995. In view of this, we have decided that for 1993 onwards, we should pay the EC-funded rate.

Food Promotion

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the food promotion budget level allocated by his Department in each of the last five years; and if he will publish the equivalent figures for France and Germany.

Mr. Curry: The Government grant to Food From Britain in the last five financial years was:

	£ million
1987-88	4·1
1988-89	4·2
1989-90	4·5
1990-91	4·5
1991-92	4·5

The expected level for 1992-93 is £4·8 million.

The equivalent body in Germany, CMA, has over this period been funded entirely by levies on the food and agricultural industries, with no Government grant. The equivalent body in France, SOPEXA, has been partly funded by the French Government. The amount of grant was 250 million francs in 1991: information on other years is not readily available.

Ethyl Alcohol and Oilseed Rape

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the United Kingdom in cultivating ethyl alcohol or oilseed rape for use as fuel; and what support such cultivation obtains from his Department.

Mr. Curry: The processes to produce ethanol from wheat, for use as a petrol substitute, and to produce biodiesel from rape seed are known and proven. Wheat production is supported through the intervention price, while rape seed producers receive area-based payments. From 1993 harvest, both crops will receive area-based support through the new arable crops support scheme whether grown for food or non-food use and will also be eligible for the set-aside payment when grown under contract on set-aside land for industrial use, including fuel production.

Cod Fishing

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will reverse his ban on allowing Lowestoft fishing boats, over 10 m, to catch cod for the rest of the year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement about the newly announced North sea cod fishing ban; if this represents a change of policy; and what has been the influence on his decision of the take-up of the Scottish cod fisheries quota;

(3) if he will make a statement on the impact, scope and enforcement of his ban on North sea cod fishing on the fishing fleet of Lowestoft.

Mr. Curry: United Kingdom quotas are divided between various industry groups in accordance with a methodology agreed with the industry. This closure applies to the non-sector vessels—that is, to all vessels over 10 m overall length not in membership of a producer organisation which manages its own sectoral quota for North sea cod. It is necessary because the latest landing statistics indicate that the non-sector vessels allocation of North sea cod has now been exhausted, and for no other reason. The fishery cannot be re-opened to non-sector vessels, as to do so would result in other groups, which still have fish to catch, being prejudiced. The closure will be enforced in the normal manner by British sea fishery officers.

Bacteria

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what commission his Department paid to NCIMB Ltd., in respect of the national collections of industrial and marine bacteria.

Mr. Curry: Under two five-year agreements which expire at the end of this financial year, this Department will have made a contribution of £1,591,183 towards the work of the National Collections of Industrial and Marine Bacteria (NCIMB) Ltd.

Destructive (Imported) Animals Act

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what use his Department has made of the Destructive (Imported) Animals Act 1932 to ban the keeping of non-indigenous species; and if he will list the species concerned.

Mr. Soames: The provisions of the Destructive (Imported) Animals Act 1932 have been used by Agriculture Ministers to prohibit the importation and keeping of musk rats, grey squirrels and non-indigenous rabbits and to prohibit the keeping of coypu. The keeping of mink on offshore islands, with some exemptions, and part of the Scottish mainland is also banned.

Flags of Convenience

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Dutch fishing vessels sailing under flags of convenience have (a) area VII beam trawl pressure stock licenses and (b) area IV beam trawl licenses.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 19 October 1992, c. 93]: As at 9 October four Dutch-owned or largely Dutch-owned United Kingdom-registered fishing vessels hold area VII beam trawl pressure stock licences. Two of these also hold area IV beam trawl licences and a further 13 have area IV beam trawl licences only.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people are employed in abattoirs in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The latest available information on regional employment for abattoirs is from the 1989 census of employment and is given in the table.

Estimated number of employers in employment in abattoirs[1] at September 1989.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 24 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 24 November.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is attending a lunch, given by the Lord Mayor and the Corporation of the City of London to celebrate the 40th anniversary of Her Majesty the Queen's accession to the throne.

Former Prime Ministers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the extent of the special financial allowance available in the past 10 years to former Prime Ministers; what measures are in place to ensure that these allowances are not used for political or personal purposes; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The special financial allowance to assist former Prime Ministers to meet the additional office costs they incur because of their special position in public life was not available before 1 April 1991. Payments totalling £88,956 were made from the allowance for 1991-92 and payments in the first seven months of 1992-93 total £67,840.

Payments from the allowance are subject to the same scrutiny and controls as other payments from voted moneys.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister when the study by the National Radiological Protection Board into the effects of radiation on veterans of British nuclear tests will be published; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The study is being undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board in conjunction with the Imperial Cancer Research Fund. Both are independent organisations and it would be inappropriate for the Government to interfere with the conduct of the study. A report will be published as soon as practically possible.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what are the terms of reference of the study by the National Radiological Protection Board into the effects of radiation on veterans of British nuclear tests; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A copy of the first report by the National Radiological Protection Board, including its terms of reference, is in the Library of the House. The updated study includes, I understand, the following changes in scope and methodology: follow-up work on all test participants to 1 January 1992, an increase of two years; a sample emigration check; examination in detail of a sample of about 200 participants to see whether a pattern emerges between incidence of disease and the tasks performed, trades and professions and location at time of detonation.

Parliamentary Private Secretaries

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the current list of parliamentary private secretaries and the Minister to whom each is attached.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now consider advising the relevant bodies of the United Nations to lift sanctions against Libya.

The Prime Minister: There can be no lifting of sanctions until Libya has complied in full with United Nations Security Council resolutions 731 and 748.

Bacteria Collections

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Government support for the National Collections of Industrial and Marine Bacteria.

The Prime Minister: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has, since 1983, provided financial support for the National Collections of Industrial and Marine Bacteria. This support, provided under an agreement with the company, ends in March 1993. The possibility of providing further support for an additional year is currently under consideration.

Tobacco

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements are in place to co-ordinate the policies of the Department of Health and the Department of Trade relating to tobacco and tobacco imports; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There are links at both ministerial and official levels.

Alcohol and Drug Abuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements have been made by Government Departments, individually or jointly, for funding existing residential projects for alcohol and drug misusers from April 1993.

The Prime Minister: If eligible, people entering such projects from April 1993 will be entitled to income support from the Department of Social Security, including a residential allowance. People will have their charges met by the relevant local authority if they are assessed as needing residential care. A total of £635 million will be made available in 1993-94 to local authorities in Great Britain in recognition of their new community care responsibilities. We have announced that guidance to local authorities will reflect the particular circumstances of projects for alcohol and drug misusers.

Funding for special needs housing schemes sponsored by housing associations, including those relating to the provision of accommodation for people with alcohol and drug-related problems, will continue to be provided by the Department of the Environment through the Housing Corporation.

The Home Office will maintain its contribution to the running costs of those residential projects that reserve bed spaces for offenders with alcohol and drug problems.

Iraq (Equipment)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Prime Minister what representations his Department received between 1986 and 1990 regarding the sale of machine tools to Iraq.

The Prime Minister: My office has received a number of representations.

Commonwealth

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister by whom, and by what method the Queen is advised on constitutional matters, including those specifically relating to the Crown, which relate equally both to the United Kingdom and to the other Commonwealth countries of which the Queen is head of state.

The Prime Minister: On the rare occasion when a constitutional matter has implications both for the United Kingdom and other countries of which The Queen is sovereign, Her Majesty would take advice from her Ministers in the countries concerned.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions over the past year, he has had discussions with the Prime Minister of those Commonwealth countries of which the Queen is head of state on matters relating to the common constitutional link of the Crown.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister who is the Queen's principal adviser on matters that relate to her capacity as head of the Commonwealth.

The Prime Minister: The Queen consults her Ministers in the United Kingdom and in those other countries of which she is Sovereign, in matters relating to her capacity as head of the Commonwealth. Her Majesty also has regular contact with Heads of State and Government of other Commonwealth countries, at the biannual Commonwealth Heads of Government meetings and on other occasions.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Eastern Europe

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total amount of financial resources provided by the external assistance programme to the former Soviet Union and central and eastern European countries up to 5 April; and for how long he expects this aid programme to continue.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Up to 5 April 1992, we provided assistance to the countries of the former Soviet Union, eastern and central Europe amounting to £166·7 million. By that date our share of EC commitments was £200 million and of money spent £55 million. We expect our aid programme to continue for some time.

Development Issues

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Minister for Overseas Development last met her EC colleagues to discuss development issues; and what was decided.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development chaired the Council of EC Development Ministers on 18 November 1992. I represented the United Kingdom. The Council adopted a declaration on aspects of development co-operation policy in the run-up to the year 2000, which sets out objectives for the Community and member states and puts in place the mechanisms to achieve a greater co-ordination between EC donors. It also adopted a resolution on family planning in developing countries which established an agreed framework for action by the Community and its member states. There were conclusions on the implementation of the 1991 resolution on human rights, democracy and development, and on co-operation with non-governmental organisations. The Community and member states reaffirmed their commitment to provide 3 billion ecu in support of "Agenda 21" and agreed to commit 600 million ecu of this over the next year. There were general discussions on aid untying and on general aspects of emergency aid including the specific case of Angola, Somalia and Mozambique.

Ascension and St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to introduce a second service between Ascension and St. Helena in addition to the present one provided by the RMS St. Helena.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At the request of the St. Helena Government, the Overseas Development Administration has been considering means of providing an extra weekly scheduled shipping service between St. Helena and Ascension Island. Attempts have been made through national and international tendering to identify a suitable vessel for purchase or charter but to date no vessel has been found which could provide the required service at an acceptable rate of return. The Overseas Development Administration are considering with the St. Helena Government alternative ways of meeting the need.

Liberia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contact the Government have had with Nigeria concerning peacekeeping forces in Liberia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We maintain regular contact with the Nigerian Government and support the efforts of the states of the Economic Community for West African States—ECOWAS—including Nigeria, to bring about a negotiated settlement in Liberia.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations have been made of the use of British manufactured arms by any party to the Liberian conflict.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We abide by the mandatory embargo on the supply of arms to all parties in Liberia except the ECOWAS ceasefire monitoring group—ECOMOG—imposed by the United Nations Security Council in its resolution 788 of 19 November 1992.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance or logistical support is being given by the United Kingdom Government to the West African peacekeeping force in Liberia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made at the European Council regarding the situation in Liberia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Yugoslavia

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department's response has been to the UN appeal for former Yugoslavia launched in September; and if that response has included action on the need for programme food aid to cover the deficits in grain supply in 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 November 1992]: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Hendry) on 23 November 1992, at columns 452-53. Our response has been planned in close consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the needs she has identified, including food supplies, in her report of 4 September and elsewhere.

Iraq

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding he will provide for humanitarian aid to northern Iraq for the next six months.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 November 1992]: A new contribution of £2·6 million was announced in my reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) on 26 October, at column 433. Of this, £2·5 million has been passed to the World Food Programme for the provision of food. This has already been bought in Turkey and WFP is now making arrangements for its transport and distribution within northern Iraq.

The remaining £100,000 is being used to augment our funding for non-governmental organisations in northern Iraq. This includes three projects with the Save the Children Fund for road maintenance, bridge erection and distribution of winter wheat seed, and a small programme of village reconstruction and development of community facilities through the Kurdish Reconstruction Organisation.

Iraq

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions to meeting humanitarian needs in the safe haven area of northern Iraq have been conducted by his Department, the European Community and the UN; and what is his estimate of the needs for both the safe haven and other areas of northern Iraq for the next six months.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Since April 1991 we have provided nearly £3 million in bilateral assistance towards the humanitarian needs of northern Iraq. The figures available to us for EC humanitarian aid to Iraq do not disaggregrate spending in the north and south. The total since April 1991 is 105 million ecu, of which the United Kingdom share is around £12·5 million. A further EC contribution is at present under consideration. Figures for UN humanitarian spending are not immediately available to us.

A UN needs assessment carried out in September 1992 estimated that 750,000 Kurds would need relief aid during the coming winter. The Food and Agriculture Organisation at that time estimated a food shortfall of 35,000 tonnes. However, it is now recognised that the figures will be considerably higher, due to the continued internal economic blockade of the north operated by the Baghdad Government. In early October a joint assessment mission led by the United States and including EC and United Kingdom representatives visited northern Iraq and concluded that in the absence of a government food ration, a further 74,000 tonnes of food would be required for a further 1·5 million people.

The UN has appealed for $256 million to implement its plan of action, of which approximately half is intended for the north. So far it calculates that $62 million is available in new pledges or carried over from its previous appeal.

Private Sector Lending

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current level of private flows from the United Kingdom to developing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Flows from the private sector of the United Kingdom to developing countries in 1990 and 1991 were as follows:

£ million

	1989	1990	1991
Direct investment	2,377	2,661	3,000
Guaranteed export credits	2,236	85	−2
Other bilateral securities and claims	−850	−1,010	−680
Total net private flows	3,763	1,736	2,318

Bank lending is the major element of "other bilateral securities and claims". Hitherto it was calculated as the annual change in outstanding loans to developing countries subject to adjustment for exchange rate changes. Strictly speaking, this is a measure of change in stock rather than a flow.

In previous years it was not possible to make an adjustment for the changes in the valuation of claims due to write-offs associated with sales of loans and swaps of loans for other securities. These include bonds issued in connection with debt service reduction agreements or equities which affect the volume of outstanding loans but do not reflect any repayments by debtor countries.

Until 1989 such adjustments were considered unnecessary as the amounts involved were relatively small. The Bank of England has undertaken inquiries during 1992 to estimate the extent of this, however, which has led to substantial revision of the figures that were published last year.

These figures should replace those published in "British Aid Statistics 1986-1990", which were −£1,058 million in 1989 and −£4,515 million in 1990.

SCOTLAND

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take, while consulting on the future of water and sewerage services in Scotland, to ascertain the views of right hon. and hon. Members.

Sir Hector Monro: The consultation paper, "Investing for our Future", seeks the views of all interested parties. Copies of this consultation paper are available in the Library, and my right hon. Friend would welcome the views of right hon. and hon. Members.

Disabled Teachers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are currently undertaken by his Department to monitor the number of (a) disabled teachers in employment and (b) disabled students on initial teacher training courses.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not collected centrally at present. However, as part of a wider review of statistical returns on students taking teacher training courses, it may be possible for the future to include information about numbers of disabled students on such courses.

Scottish Homes

Mr. George Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the debt repayment by Scottish Homes which was announced as part of the autumn statement.

Mr. Lang: The repayment of loans totalling £250,143,307 will be made on 25 November, when Scottish Homes will make a payment to the national loans fund totalling £250,139,023.

Scottish Homes will receive a capital grant from the Scottish Office Environment Department to allow it to make this payment. Parliamentary approval of this new expenditure will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the housing and environmental services Scotland vote—class XV, vote 5. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £250,139,023 will be met by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund.

The repayment is expected to release some £70 million over the next three years for new investment, focusing chiefly on housing improvement and developments.

Care and Repair Scheme

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when his Department will make a policy announcement on the care and repair scheme, co-ordinated by Shelter, Age Concern and his Department's Environment Department;

(2) if he will increase his Department's funding to the care and repair initiative scheme.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 November 1992]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning has indicated in reply to letters from hon. Members that he hopes to make an announcement on the future of the care and repair initiative by early December.

Fire Safety

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision has been made within his Department for monitoring the impact on fire safety of changes to the building regulations and the Approved Document B Fire Safety 1992 Regulations for England and Wales in order to assess the possible implications of the regulations for building and fire standards in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The effectiveness of the building standards in England and Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. My Department has developed close working relationships with other Departments which facilitate exchanges of information on the operation of the separate building regulations.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to review or amend existing building and fire standards in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received on building and fire standards in Scotland; how many were (a) in favour of and (b) opposed to preserving existing arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The technical standards for compliance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations were last reviewed in 1990. New proposals affecting the fire provisions in the standards are currently under consideration and will shortly be issued to interested bodies for comment.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the composition of the advisory panel on building and fire standards in Scotland, the length of tenure for each appointment and the level of remuneration, where appropriate.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The membership of the Building Standards Advisory Committee is as follows:

Professor C. C. Robertson DA FRIBA FRIAS FRAIA FCIOB (Chairman)
Professor S. J. Allwinkle BSc MSAAT
Mrs. J. B. Deans MBE PRIAS BArch RIBA

Mr. A. G. Short MCIOB FICW MRSH FFB
Mr. M. A. Underwood BSc DipTech(CEng)
Mr. D. Walker

Members are appointed for a period not exceeding three years initially and are unpaid.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes are envisaged to the periods of fire resistance or compartmentation size required in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend will shortly be consulting interested bodies on a package of proposed amendments to those parts of the technical standards for compliance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations which deal with fire resistance and means of escape from fire and facilities for fire fighting. The detail of the changes which are finally agreed cannot be determined until account has been taken of representations received in response to the consultation exercise.

Training

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the target number of contract training weeks under (a) employment training and (b) youth training set by his Department with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise for (i) 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, broken down by local enterprise company, with the percentage difference in each case.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The Scottish Office did not set for 1991-92 or 1992-93 target numbers of contract training weeks for Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and their local enterprise companies. The number of contract training weeks provided by the companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of these bodies to write to the hon. Member.

Rising-fives

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the working of the arrangements for admission to school or rising five-year-olds in Scotland; and what guidance his Department gives to education authorities on one term entry and the provision of pre-school education.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The fixing of school commencement dates is a matter for education authorities to determine in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Education (Scotland) Act 19[illegible]. At present, all education authorities set a single school commencement date at the start of the school session and admit children to school on that date if their fifth birthday falls between the preceding and the following February, though they have discretion to admit younger children if they wish. The provision by education authorities of pre-school education is entirely a matter for each authority. My right hon. Friend has issued no guidance on this, nor on the question of whether one or more commencement dates should be set.

A71

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Strathclyde regional council (Stonehouse bypass, A71) compulsory purchase order was originally applied for; if he will now approve it; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The made compulsory purchase order and all the necessary supporting documents were submitted on 15 June 1988 by Strathclyde regional council to the Secretary of State for his determination. There were five objectors to the order. The council considered that their objections could be resolved by agreement and, at the council's request, no public local inquiry was instituted while discussions took place. Generally, it is in the interests of parties to settle their differences without recourse to an inquiry, and, in order to protect the rights of individuals, that time should be allowed for this process to take place.

The last objection to the order was withdrawn on 25 August 1992. Following this, the council notified my Department on 11 November of the several modifications needed to be made to the order in the light of the agreements reached with the objectors. The order will be determined as soon as the necessary administrative procedures are completed.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Southdown Cleaning and Maintenance plc about compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 November 1992]: None.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek an early meeting with Fife regional council to discuss compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the operation of compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no plans for any specific review.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding financial irregularities arising from the process of compulsory competitive tendering in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 November 1992]: None.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up an inquiry into the activities of the private sector company concerned with cleaning and maintenance, the name of which has been supplied to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no locus to intervene in matters essentially of commercial dispute which fall to be resolved by the parties themselves.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 November 1992]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 17 November at column 104. There are no agencies within my Department that have been announced as candidates for privatisation or contractorisation.

HEALTH

NHS Pensioners Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who manages the NHS Pensioners Trust; in what way NHS pensioners are informed of its existence; on what basis grants are made; and when and where the annual accounts are published.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service Pensioners Trust is managed independently by its trustees. All NHS pensioners were informed of the trust's existence, in its first year of operation—1991-92—by the Paymaster General's Office. Subsequently it has relied upon professional organisations, various staff groups and social work agencies to inform eligible applicants of its existence.

Grants are awarded primarily on the basis of the applicant's level of disposable income. The annual accounts are normally published in October and can be obtained from the trust at 14 Palace court, London W2 4HT.

Expenditure

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide by (a) regional health authority, (b) district health authority, (c) family health services authority and (d) NHS trust details of budget over or underspending in 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The annual budgets for individual regional and district health authorities and those for the cash-limited elements of the expenditure incurred by family health services authorities are matters for regional health authorities and detailed information is not collected centrally. However, the department does monitor cash spending by each region in total and for 1991-92 regional health authorities maintained their spending within the sum allocated by the Department.

NHS trusts are not given set budgets and are allowed some flexibility in managing their finances but they are nevertheless expected to meet financial performance targets.

Income and expenditure-based information derivable from the 1991-92 audited accounts of health authorities and NHS trusts will be available later in the year.

Blood Products

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the cost of purchase to the hospital service of the NHS of (a) plasma and (b) factor 8 in each year since 1985; and how the cost of the purchaser was shared between (i) NHS-derived material, (ii) non-NHS British material and (iii) imported material;

(2) how much (a) plasma and (b) factor 8 was used in the NHS in each year since 1985; and what was the country of origin of imported plasma or factor 8, used in each of those years;

(3) what is the item cost of (a) blood plasma and (b) factor 8 from (i) NHS, (ii) non-HNS British and (iii) imported sources.

Mr. Sackville: Many of these details are not held centrally. Such information as is available is given in the table. The national health service does not import plasma and uses only plasma derived from voluntary unpaid donors in this country.

We are consulting professional organisations about appointing new members to the committee to advise on the categories of drug to which the selected list arrangements have recently been extended.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the terms of reference of the advisory committee on NHS drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The current terms of reference are:

"To advise the UK Health Ministers about the composition of schedules 10 and 11 to the NHS (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992, and the corresponding schedules in the Regulations in Scotland and Northern Ireland (except those items which are in Schedule 10 because the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances has advised that they are not considered drugs in the circumstances of general practice) in order that drugs to meet all real clinical needs at the lowest possible cost to the NHS are available in the following categories: mild to moderate pain-killers, indigestion remedies, laxatives, cough and cold remedies, vitamins, tonics and benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers."

These are currently being reviewed in the light of the changes announced on 12 November and the revised terms of reference will be announced as soon as possible.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to receive the first recommendations of the advisory committee on NHS drugs on the 10 additional therapeutic categories announced on 12 November.

Dr. Mawhinney: The advisory committee will be considering drugs within the new categories as soon as practicable. As now, in examining particular drugs they will consult fully with the manufacturers. Changes to the list of non-prescribable drugs will be made progressively over the next year.

London Health Services

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received following the publication of the Tomlinson report; and how many organisations have been sent a copy of the document for comment.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am undertaking a series of meetings with many of the organisations concerned to listen to their views. In addition, we have received a number of written submissions and letters from interested organisations and individuals.

The report has been sent to all health authorities as well as a wide range of medical education, research and other relevant bodies, with an invitation to comment.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will announce the membership and remit of the London implementation group; and whether the membership of this group will include representatives of the professions and staff organisations working in the NHS in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: We shall confirm the remit of the London implementation group, and its membership, when we announce our full response to the Tomlinson report early in the new year.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will prevent any more beds being closed in London before she announces the Government's response to the recommendations for change outlined in the Tomlinson report.

Dr. Mawhinney: We expect to announce our response to the Tomlinson report early in the new year. Bed numbers in individual hospitals are a matter for determination by local management.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of whether the problems identified by Sir Bernard Tomlinson in his report on London's health services are unique to the capital.

Dr. Mawhinney: The report Sir Bernard Tomlinson has produced is a strategic view of the particular needs of London's health services. Clearly there are likely to be some parallels concerning primary care services and the disposition of hospitals in other cities. We shall need in the future to consider what recommendations of the Tomlinson report, if any, are applicable elsewhere.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how she intends to ensure that full account is taken of the implications for staff of proposals to change the pattern of London's health services.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ministers are holding a series of meetings with medical, nursing and other national health service staff organisations to discuss the Tomlinson report including its potential impact on staff. There will also be consultation locally on any closures or substantial changes in services arising from the report.

Myopia

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to make the treatment of myopia with laser technology available in the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans at present to extend the use of lasers to treat national health service patients with myopia.

Appointments (Women)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will present, as numbers rather than percentages, the number of women who will be members of health authorities and national health service trust boards by 1996.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not possible to predict the actual number of women who will be appointed to these boards by 1996.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the appointees to the boards of third wave national health service trusts will be women; and how many appointees to each authority by 1996 will be women.

Dr. Mawhinney: Of the 512 third wave appointments made so far—chairmen and non-executive directors—203 are women. We are currently set to reach 40 per cent. set for this wave of appointments.

It is not possible to predict the actual number of women who will be appointed to third wave trust boards by 1996.

Magnetic Resonance Scanners

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many magnetic resonance scanners are available within the NHS; if she will list their locations; and what plans she has to increase the number.

Mr. Sackville: The available information held centrally shows that there are 56 systems available, or on order, for the national health service in England, plus access to one mobile unit. We have provided additional funds this year towards the purchase of new systems.

The location of MR scanners available to the NHS by region is as follows:

Region	Number
East Anglia	2
North East Thames	2
North West Thames	6
South East Thames	2
South West Thames	5

Epilepsy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many surgical operations to treat epilepsy took place within the NHS in the latest year for which figures are available; and what guidance she has given to purchasing authorities to increase this figure.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. It is for health authorities, within available resources, to purchase services to meet the needs of their residents including the need for epilepsy surgery.

Nurses, East Cumbria

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered general nurses have recently passed the examination in East Cumbria health district; and how many have been offered employment in that district.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

GP Fund Holders

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide the underspend and overspend of each first wave general practitioner fund-holding practice in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information will not be available until regional health authorities have received final audit reports for all fund-holding practices. Early information is that, overall, fund-holding practices made efficiency savings of about 4 per cent. in 1991-92.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide the percentage of the hospital budget of each first wave general practitioner fund-holding practice spent outside the NHS in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Qa Business Services

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of reference of the Audit Commission report commissioned by West Midlands regional health authority into Qa Business Services.

Dr. Mawhinney: The decision to audit the management buy-out of the management information services division of West Midlands regional health authority by Qa Business Services Ltd. was made by the statutory auditor. The terms of reference for this report are a matter for the Audit Commission.

Opportunity 2000

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she regards her commitment under Opportunity 2000 to increase the number of women members of health authorities and trusts to 35 per cent. by 1994 as a quota or as a target; and if she will make it her policy to ensure that men are not disadvantaged by her Opportunity 2000 commitment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our commitment is to selection on merits. We do not believe in positive discrimination or in continuing direct or indirect discrimination.

Patients

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide the number of patients per whole-time equivalent general practitioner in each year since 1989.

Dr. Mawhinney: Figures for the number of patients per whole-time equivalent general practioner were not collected prior to 1990. The table gives the information for England as at 1 October in 1990 and 1991:

Year	Average number of patients per whole time equivalent GP
1990	1979
1991	1996

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mortgages

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those people whose mortgages are being paid by his Department have endowment mortgages and how many have repayment mortgages.

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people currently have their mortgages paid by his Department; what is the average monthly payment in such cases; what will be total cost to his Department in mortgage payments this year; and what are the equivalent figures for each year since 1985.

Mr. Burt: The latest available figures are given in the table:

Help with mortgage interest in supplementary benefit/income support 1986-1991

4. Weekly average (£) for half interest	—	—	16·71	21·86	33·69	35·61

Notes: From January 1987, claimants aged under 60 receive half mortgage interest for the first 16 weeks of their claim.
No figures are available for 1985.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to provide help to beneficiaries to keep up insurance payments on endowment mortgages when unemployed.

Mr. Burt: We have no such proposals. The Council of Mortgage Lenders has assured us that people whose full mortgage interest payments are covered by income support will not face repossession. It is not the purpose of income support to help with the acquisition of a capital asset.

Benefits Agency, Yorkshire

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of community care grant applications received in (a) the York Benefits Agency office, (b) the North Yorkshire Benefits Agency area and (c) the United Kingdom are being refused currently and were being refused one, two, three and four years ago.

Mr. Scott: National statistics for the last four years are published in the Secretary of State's annual report on the social fund. Details of community care grant applications and refusals by each Benefits Agency district from April 1990 to September 1992 are in the Library. Earlier information relating to York office is in the table.

	per cent.
1988-89	45·18
1989-90	54·22

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the annual social fund budgeting loan budget for (a) the York Benefits Agency office, (b) the North Yorkshire Benefits Agency area and (c) the United Kingdom had been allocated in the first six months of the year in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Scott: Social fund budgets are allocated on an annual basis. Information concerning discretionary social fund budget allocations and expenditure is in the Library.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) single claimants, (b) couples, (c) single parents, (d) couples with dependent children, (e) pensioners and (f) claimants in total in the North Yorkshire Benefits Agency area are currently having one, two, three, four and five or more deductions made from their benefit; what is the value of the largest and the smallest weekly deduction being made from any claimant in the area; and what is the average amount of all weekly deductions being made in the area.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of recipients of invalidity benefit per thousand of population in each region.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

Income Support

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State Social Security what is his estimate of the numbers of (a) women, (b) men and (c) children dependent on income support, distinguishing between claimants above and below state pension age, and showing separately the number of women on whose behalf income support is being claimed by their husbands or partners.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information is in the table.

	Number
Total number of claimants	4,487
of which: male claimants	1,965
female claimants	2,522
Total number of children	2,368
Male claimants aged over 65	269
Female claimants aged over 60	1,136
Total number of couple cases	763
where claimant: Male	726
Female	37

Notes:

1. All figures are thousands, rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Couple and pensioner cases are included in the total number of claimants.
3. Source: Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiry May 1991.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what rate benefit will be deducted under the Child Support Act 1991 for mothers aged (a) 25 years or over, (b) 18 to 24 years and (c) 16 to 18 years who refuse to name the father of their children.

Mr. Burt: The rate of benefit reduction will be an amount equivalent to 20 per cent. of the income support adult aged over 25 personal allowance for the first six months and for the next 12 months an amount equivalent to 10 per cent. of the income support adult aged over 25 personal allowance. These rates will apply to all parents who decide, without good cause, not to co-operate in the pursuit of maintenance.

Pensioners' Price Index

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what use is made of the pensioners' price index in calculating the annual old age pension increase.

Miss Widdecombe: Retirement pension is uprated annually in line with the retail prices index (RPI) which is widely accepted as the best indicator of changes in the general price level. Had the single person household pensioners' price index been used to uprate the retirement pension since 1979 instead of the RPI, it would now be worth £6·65 per week less than its current rate.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the level of Christmas bonus payable to senior citizens in (a) each of the past 15 years and (b) the current financial year; what its level would have been in each of those years had it been linked to inflation or prices, whichever was the higher in each relevant year; and if he will make a statement on the bonus in 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The Christmas bonus has remained at £10 since its introduction in 1972. No Government have increased its value since then. Because the bonus is paid to all regardless of income, any increase in the amount would be a poorly targeted use of resources. We have, therefore, no plans to increase the amount of the bonus. The £10 bonus will however be paid in 1992 as provided in statute. The table shows the level of the bonus in each of the past 15 years and the current financial year had it been increased annually in line with prices.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the level of Christmas bonus for pensioners which would be required to match the equivalent purchasing power of the £10 bonus paid in 1974.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on Thursday 19 November, at columns 367-68.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on what new rights the citizens charter will give to disabled people.

Mr. Scott: The citizens charter calls on public sector organisations to take account of the needs of all their customers—including, where appropriate, those with disabilities—when they are setting service standards.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on future arrangements for independent living for the most severely disabled people.

Mr. Scott: We have decided to legislate in the current financial year to establish a new fund from 1 April 1993, to help people of working age with the most severe disabilities to live independently in the community. The legislation will also provide for a successor fund for existing cases to meet the commitment I made in May 1991 to continue cash payments to people getting help from the independent living fund—ILF—when it ceases to operate at the end of March 1993.

The ILF has proved very successful in helping severely disabled people to live independently in the community. With the introduction of the new community care arrangements from April, responsibility for arranging care for disabled peole will rest with local authorities. However, the Government recognise that there will be a small group of the most severely disabled people for whom the costs of care in their own home will exceed the cost of a place in residential care or a nursing home.

The new fund for this group will work in partnership with local authorities, reflecting their primary role following the April 1993 community care changes. The local authority will be expected to make a contribution by way of services equivalent to what it would have spent on residential or nursing care and the fund will be able to provide a cash payment in addition. Additional resources will be made available to local authorities in respect of these changes and there will be a further announcement about resources shortly.

The trustees of the ILF have today announced that they intend to close to new applications from midnight on 25 November, in order to ensure an orderly transfer of cases to the successor body. I understand that all applications received before midnight on 25 November will be dealt with in the usual way. Disabled people who meet the new criteria and who would have looked to the fund for help over the next few months will be able to apply to the new body from next April. The vast majority of potential ILF beneficiaries are already receiving help from their local authority.

Over the four years of its existence, the ILF has done a splendid job and I pay the warmest possible tribute to the trustees, the director and the staff who are involved with it.

Pensioners (Income)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the years 1962 to 1979 and from 1979 to the latest available date the real net increase in pensioner income; and if he will divide this data according to the proportion of the increase resulting from changes in (a) national insurance state earnings-related pension entitlement and (b) occupational pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: The tables show increases in pensioners' income from 1970 to 1988 and the proportion of those increases resulting from changes in occupational pensions. The earliest data available for pensioner income analysis using the current methodology commences in 1970. Comparable data for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It is also not possible to identify SERPS from existing family expenditure survey data, and the occupational pension income is available on a gross rather than net basis.

Notes to the tables:

1. Estimates are based upon data from the 1970-1988 Family Expenditure Surveys.
2. Components may not sum to totals owing to rounding.
3. Estimates relate to pensioner units, defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.
4. Real increases in occupational pension income are presented as a percentage of real increases in gross income rather than net income as requested. This is because estimates of pension amounts are available only on a gross basis.
5. Negative signs in column 6 of each table represent changes in occupational pension amounts that are opposite in direction to those in gross income.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has available regarding the number of claimants who are currently receiving income support (a) towards the cost of residence in a care or nursing home within the Wakefield metropolitan district and (b) from benefit offices within the Wakefield metropolitan district towards the cost of residence in a care or nursing home outside that district.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 23 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of claimants currently receiving Income Support (a) towards the cost of residence in a care or nursing home within the Wakefield Metropolitan District and (b) from Benefits Agency offices within the Wakefield Metropolitan District towards the cost of residence in a care or nursing home outside that district.

The complete range of information you requested is not available except at disproportionate cost. This is because the information is not routinely collected by the Benefits Agency. However, a one-off exercise was conducted in the Wakefield Metropolitan District in July 1992. At that time there were 1,055 customers receiving Income Support towards the cost of residential care or nursing home accommodation in the Wakefield Metropolitan District. Those Income Support customers in residential care or nursing homes outside the Wakefield Metropolitan District are dealt with by the appropriate Benefits Agency Office.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Family Credit

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will repay £45·71 to cover bank charges incurred by Miss Sally Howes of the Windmill, Dartington, Totnes, as a result of the delay in processing her claim for family credit.

Mr. Burt: The administration of family credit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. As Miss Howes' claim is a personal and confidential matter, he will reply direct to my hon. Friend.

Public Buildings (Access)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if Her Majesty's Government will make grants available for the installation of hand rails next to steps for public buildings;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government will provide grants for permanent ramps for public buildings to give access to the disabled.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

No. A significant proportion of those who use public buildings are people with disabilities and the responsible building owner or building manager will appreciate that it is his job to see that, to give access to his building, handrails are installed by any steps, or ramps provided.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information Her Majesty's Government have on the purpose of the nuclear research centres in Tehran and Isfahan, and the nuclear sites at Gorgan, Darkhovin and Saghand in Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 13 November, at column 1010. The International Atomic Energy Agency inspection team which went to Iran in February also visited the nuclear sites at Isfahan, Tehran and Saghand, but not Gorgan or Darkhovin. We are aware of reports that Iran plans to build nuclear power plants at both these sites.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April;

(2) which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department;

(3) if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since the last general election.

Mr. Goodlad: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given to his question on 19 October 1992, at column 32.

Macedonia

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise within the European Community the action of the Greek Government in prosecuting individuals who have dissented from that Government's policy with regard to Macedonia within the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No, sir. The decision to prosecute is one for the judicial authorities of Greece and not the Greek Government.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has raised within the European Community the attitude of the Greek Government towards dissension within Greece over the question of Macedonia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not raised this issue within the European Community.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Greek Government to dissuade them from prosecuting individuals who have dissented and demonstrated against that Government's policy towards Macedonia in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No, sir. The decision to prosecute is one for the judicial authorities of Greece and not the Greek Government.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Greek Government regarding their suppression of dissent over the question of Macedonia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not raised this issue with the Greek Government.

Mr. Allan Nicklin

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times the British ambassador in Saudi Arabia has met Mr. Allan Nicklin during the last six months; and how many meetings the ambassador has had with Saudi officials in order to secure Mr. Nicklin's release.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's ambassador has met Mr. Nicklin on five occasions and the chargé d'affaires twice in the last six months. Since Mr. Nicklin was first detained there has also been very frequent contact between Mr. Nicklin and Her Majesty's consuls in Jedda and Riyadh.

The ambassador has had nine and the chargé d'affaires two meetings with Saudi Ministers and Deputy Ministers, and frequent contact with senior Government officials, in our efforts to secure the Saudi Government's agreement to allowing Mr. Nicklin to leave Saudi Arabia. The ambassador has also spoken with the deputy governor of Mecca.

Files (Disposal)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for how many years his Department keeps departmental files before shredding or other means of disposal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: With the exception of files on routine administrative matters, dealing with accounts, transport, office equipment etcetera, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's policy is to keep files intact until they are reviewed in their 28th or 29th year. Duplicate or ephemeral material of no historical value is removed with the agreement of the Public Record Office inspecting officer and files are released to the Public Record Office when they are 30 years old.

African Elections

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking, in conjunction with EC partners, to help ensure that forthcoming elections will be free and fair in Kenya, Nigeria and Ghana.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As presidency of the EC, the United Kingdom works closely with its EC partners in pressing the elections in these, and other countries, to be free and fair. Steps include, where necessary, both public statements and private demarches. In addition, the United Kingdom has provided a wide range of both technical and financial assistance to the electoral process in Kenya and Ghana. This has included the provision of office equipment to the electoral authorities, ballot boxes in Kenya and electoral booths in Ghana. We have also contributed to the training of electoral officers and, through the Commonwealth secretariat, to the election monitoring process in both countries.

It was announced on 17 November that the presidential election in Nigeria has been postponed from 5 December to 12 June. We will be consulting our EC partners about possible assistance to the electoral process when we have more details.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those restaurants and hotels in London used in the 1991-92 financial year for the purposes of ministerial hospitality.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Publishing a list of establishments commonly used by Ministers of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for official entertainment would have security implications.

For this reason, I am unable to give a reply to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was spent by Ministers in his Department on official entertainment in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Expenditure on both wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on ministerial entertainment for the financial year 1991-92 was £349,678.

This figure includes part of the grant in aid to the Government hospitality fund—which meets the costs of the greater part of all ministerial entertainment.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Bomb Damage

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is his estimate of the date by which all the buildings destroyed and demolished as a consequence of the bomb explosion in Coleraine on 13 November will be rebuilt;

(2) what are the total sums which were agreed for damage to property arising from damage by terrorist action in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and by how much those sums were reduced because of betterment;

(3) how many buildings were damaged in the terrorist bomb explosion in Coleraine on the night of 13 November; and what is his estimate of the cost of repairs;

(4) what is his estimate of the total cost of the damage caused by the bomb explosion in Coleraine on 13 November;

(5) what is his estimate of the cost of damage to property caused by terrorist action since 1 January to the latest available date;

(6) when he expects the repairs on all the buildings damaged by the bomb explosion in Coleraine on 13 November to be completed;

(7) what is his estimate of the betterment element in respect of the commercial buildings damaged and destroyed as a consequence of the bomb explosion in Coleraine on 13 November; and what the total cost of interest charges would be on that betterment element at the present lowest level of bank interest presently prevailing in Northern Ireland;

(8) what is his estimate of the value of the commercial buildings damaged and destroyed or demolished as a consequence of the bomb explosion in Coleraine on 13 November; and what is his estimate of the cost of repairing and replacing those premises;

(9) how many buildings have had to be demolished in Coleraine as a result of the terrorist bomb explosion on 13 November; and what is his estimate of the cost of replacing them.

Mr. Mates: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. Robinson. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Robinson to Mr. William Ross, dated 20 November 1992:

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Questions concerning criminal damage compensation and in particular damage to property in Coleraine on 13 November. The Secretary of State has asked me to respond.

Approximately 300 buildings were partially damaged as a result of this incident. The current estimate of damage to these properties is £5 million. Six buildings were so seriously damaged as to require demolition and our preliminary estimate is that the compensation due for these claims will be around £3 million. The estimate for the total amount of compensation that will be payable is respect of damage to buildings, contents and consequential loss is £11 million.

With regard to commercial buildings our loss adjusters estimate that damage amounting to £7·5 million was incurred. An estimate of the value of these buildings is not available. The levels of "betterment" involved cannot be estimated since they can vary significantly depending on the nature and scale of reinstatement.

It is not possible to estimate with any accuracy the time that will be taken to fully repair or reinstate the properties damaged as much depends on matters outside the direct control of the Compensation Agency. However the Agency will ensure that all practical steps are taken to facilitate the processing of claims including, where necessary, the issuing of interim payments to assist claimants in the speedy reinstatement of their property.

The following table details the total settlement value of terrorist related claims cleared in each of the last three calendar years:

Year	Value £'000
1989	17,845
1990	13,289
1991	22,934

I regret that I am unable to supply details of "betterment" deductions as such information is not available.

The current estimate for the cost of terrorist related damage incurred in 1992 to date is £76 million.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are out of work as a consequence of the terrorist bomb explosion in Coleraine on 13 November.

Mr. Hanley: The payment of benefit to unemployed people is the responsibility of the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. Wylie to Mr. William Ross, dated 20 November 1992:

As I am responsible for the payment of benefit to unemployed people your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of people out of work as a consequence of the terrorist bomb explosion in Coleraine on 13 November 1992 has been passed to me for reply.

While the full impact of this attack has yet to be assessed, to date three people have registered as unemployed as a result of the explosion.

I hope you find this information helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and copies will be placed in the Library.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fatalities took place in each of the last three years in each health board area from causes associated with (a) solvent abuse and (b) illegal drugs.

Mr. Hanley: The number of solvent associated deaths in Northern Ireland during the past three years was as follows:

Eastern	—	—	8
Northern	1	2	1
Southern	1	2	1
Western	2	—	1
TOTAL	4	4	11

Information about the small number of fatalities resulting from the illegal use of drugs is not available as these cannot readily be distinguished from deaths associated with the overdose—accidental or otherwise—of prescribed medication.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hospital admissions took place in each of the last three years in each health board area from causes associated with (a) solvent abuse and (b) illegal drugs.

Mr. Hanley: The number of patients who received hospital treatment for solvent and drug misuse in each board area in the past three years is as follows:

[1] Information not yet available.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the monitoring procedures employed by each health board to assess and review drug abuse and solvent abuse problems.

Mr. Hanley: Health and social services boards, through their community addiction teams and health education and promotion departments, maintain close contact on drug and solvent misuse with the Royal Ulster Constabulary, voluntary bodies, other health professionals and interested groups within their areas. Each board is represented on the Northern Ireland Committee on Drug Misuse which monitors the extent of drug and solvent misuse in the Province and advises the Department of Health and Social Services on prevention measures.

There is also a statutory requirement for all doctors to notify the Department of Health's Chief Medical Officer of any person who is considered or suspected of being addicted to a drug or drugs controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total financial provision made available by each health board, and the Department of Health and Social Services, in each of the past three years for the purpose of combating solvent and drug abuse.

Mr. Hanley: I regret that this information is not available. Resources to combat solvent and drug misuse are included in overall health and personal social services allocations and cannot be identified separately.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to undertake public awareness campaigns aimed at informing (i) school children and (ii) the general public of the dangers of drug or solvent abuse.

Mr. Hanley: The Department of Education has issued detailed guidance on misuse of drugs to all schools, further education colleges and youth groups in the province. The Department of Health and Social Services has also published an advice booklet on solvent misuse aimed at parents and the issue of a similar booklet on drugs is under consideration. The Northern Ireland Committee on Drug Misuse is at present considering what further measures are necessary to help prevent drug and solvent misuse by young people.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful prosecutions for drug and solvent offences have been launched in Northern Ireland in each of the past three years.

Mr. Mates: The requested information is as follows:

Year	Drugs offences		Solvent offences
	Successful	Unsuccessful	Successful	Unsuccessful
1989	133	15	—	—
1990	113	9	1	—
1991	157	9	—	—
1992[1]	229	16	—	—

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of officers employed on programmes dealing with drug and solvent abuses in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a similar question from the hon. Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs) on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 7.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nightwear (Flammability)

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider amending the Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985 to ensure that chemical additives to cloth are banned where they make the material liable to ignition through a spark.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is not aware of any chemical additives to cloth which would render garments made from that material more liable to ignition from a spark.

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider the extension of the Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985 to ensure that garments carrying the "keep away from fire" label that might flare from a spark carry a stronger warning.

Mr. Leigh: The Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985 require that children's nightdresses, nightshirts and dressing gowns, except cotton terry towelling bath robes, must pass a test to ensure that they are made from fabric with slow burning qualities and do not therefore flare up quickly. All other nightwear, and garments commonly worn as nightwear, including cotton terry towelling bath robes, must carry a permanent label to show whether or not they pass this test. Such garments which do not pass the slow burning test must carry a "keep away from fire" label in a position where it can readily be seen by a prospective purchaser. I have no plans to amend the regulations.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those agencies in his Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Heseltine: Of the 10 agencies in my Department, two have been announced as candidates for privatisation or contractorisation, the National Engineering Laboratory and Companies House. We will keep under continued review the prospect of further privatisation.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet representatives of the BCCI campaign committee to discuss the BCCI staff benefit fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Mr. Saleem and Mr. Qayyum of the BCCI campaign committees met my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry on 17 November 1992.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what information he has in regard to the role of the Wickman-Bennett machine tool company of Coventry in providing machine tools to Iraq between 1985 and 1989, for use in its nuclear weapons development programme;

(2) what information he has on the use to which United Kingdom origin precision technology exported to Iraq has been put at the (a) Hutteen and (b) Taji factories in Iraq.

Mr. Needham: I am aware that the inspections in Iraq by the United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency have revealed the names of many companies around the world which have traded with Iraq, including some from Britain. It is possible that more names will be revealed as time goes on.

Any indications of wrongdoing will be urgently investigated and, if appropriate, will be a matter for the courts. However, it would be quite wrong to conclude, without further analysis, that the companies named have behaved wrongfully. Until the invasion of Kuwait, trade with Iraq was not illegal provided strategic export controls were not breached.

Iran

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about his Department's handling of Wickman's export licence to Iran.

Mr. Needham: No. This Department does not make statements in public about individual export licence applications.

Export Control

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the criteria he adopts in deciding whether to investigate media allegations of violations of export control regulations and end-user certificate commitments.

Mr. Needham: Inquiries following allegations of breaches or attempted breaches of export restrictions are matters for the commissioners of Customs and Excise.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contribution ministers or officials of his Department will make to the forthcoming seminar to be held by the Export Control Organisation on a practical guide to United Kingdom export controls.

Mr. Needham: The seminar will be chaired by an official from the Export Control Organisation (ECO) of the DTI. Others from the ECO will make presentations on export control matters and will participate in workshops on specific aspects of export licensing procedures.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now make it his practice to report to Parliament on the details of individual export licence applications.

Mr. Needham: No. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it has been the practice of successive Administrations not to disclose such information. However, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the minutes of evidence to the Trade and Industry Select Committee, 26 November 1991, pages 37 to 106.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to consider the encouragement of 15-year rolling contracts for renewable energy projects as part of his Department's review into the non-fossil fuel obligation system.

Mr. Eggar: I expect to take decisions on the policy framework for a further renewables order under the non-fossil fuel obligation in the light of the recommendations in the forthcoming report from the Renewable Energy Advisory Group.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish the report of the Renewable Energy Advisory Group.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 2 November 1992, Official Report, column 60.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has made to the European Commission on the desirability of funding both the nuclear and renewable energy sectors when extending the non-fossil fuel obligation;

(2) what representations he has made to European Commission officials within the last six months concerning the extension of the non-fossil fuel obligation and its effect on the Community's competition policy.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is in discussion with the European Commission concerning the 1998 limitation on the non-fossil fuel obligation in respect to renewables. My Department has not made any representations to the Commission about further funding for the nuclear sector.

Pit Closures

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what guidelines have been set by his Department for Boyds Mining Consultants in relation to the assessment of viability of the 21 collieries under current review;

(2) what methodology will be used by Boyds Mining Consultants to assess the viability of each of the 21 collieries currently under review.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 20 November 1992, Official Report, column 433.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the likely cost to the Exchequer for work to be carried out by Boyds Mining Consultants in relation to the viability study on the 21 collieries under current review.

Mr. Eggar: Details of contractual terms between the Department and its consultants are commercially confidential.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many private companies have expressed an interest in operating any number of the 10 collieries at present in the review procedure and due to close in January 1993.

Mr. Eggar: My Department knows of eight private sector companies which have expressed potential interest in operating one or more of the 10 collieries currently subject to statutory consultation.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many consultancies were asked to tender by his Department to assess the viability of the 21 collieries under present review.

Mr. Eggar: John T. Boyd Company was the only consultancy approached. In the light of its previous work for the Department, it is uniquely well-placed to complete the study in the very limited time available. I am satisfied that its appointment represents good value for money.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what external legal advice he has taken over who is responsible for the cost of cleaning any future river pollution arising from the closure of collieries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The relevant legislation on water pollution and, in particular, discharges into the United Kingdom's river system, the Water Resources Act 1991, is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with British Coal and the National Rivers Authority about the environmental effects of proposed colliery closures; what consultancy work is planned and by whom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. I understand that there is regular liaison between British Coal and the NRA at local and regional levels on all issues relevant to the NRA's responsibilities for regulating water pollution.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the United Kingdom monthly volumes of imports and exports for each month this year.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom visible trade in index form is published in "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of United Kingdom trade was with (a) Group of Seven countries, (b) EC countries and (c) G7 or EC countries, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Needham: The information is given in the table.

Table: United Kingdom total visible trade[1]

Timber

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what three countries import the most timber into the United Kingdom; what were the comparable countries in 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: In 1991, Canada, Sweden and Finland were the main exporters of timber into the United Kingdom. In 1980, the main sources of timber imports into the United Kingdom were Canada, Finland and the Soviet Union.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much timber was imported into the United Kingdom in each year since 1989; what guidelines are followed to ensure that this timber is not imported from countries defying safe environmental directives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Statistics on timber imports are published in the "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom," a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is responsible for enforcing the restrictions on imports provided for under the convention on international trade in endangered species. The Government's policy is to encourage sustainable management of forests; wider restrictions on timber exports are neither practicable nor desirable.

Coal Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make representations at the forthcoming EC Energy Council concerning subsidies to the German coal industry; whether he will consult at the Energy Council with other EC nations concerning the proposed pit closure programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I expect there to be a discussion at the next meeting of the Energy Council on 30 of this month of the coal industry throughout the Community.

Energy Programmes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals Her Majesty's Government will make to the forthcoming EC Energy Council concerning the ALTENER and SAVE programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: At the Council my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade intends to recommend that the terms of the ALTENER decision are politically agreed and that consideration of the SAVE directive, relating to non-traded goods, should continue. Final adoption of either item is not possible until after the European Parliament's opinion has been received.

Dr. Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the amounts and specific sources of European-sourced funding received by (a) the fast reactor programme and (b) the Atomic Energy Authority fusion programme in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: The UK programme in support of the European fast reactor collaboration does not receive any funds from European sources. The AEA's fusion programme receives support from Euratom as part of the AEA's contract of association with Euratom. In 1991-92 the contribution was £3·9 million and in 1992-93 it is expected to be in the order of £2·4 million.

Dr. Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the level of Government funding for 1992-93 and 1993-94 to (a) the fast reactor programme and (b) the Atomic Energy Authority fusion programme.

Mr. Eggar: 1992-93, provision for the fast reactor and fusion programmes is set out in the Supply estimates for 1992-93, class V, vote 2, section D, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. For 1993-94 the allocation of funds for individual nuclear research and development programmes has yet to be determined.

Dr. Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people are employed in each site currently (a) on the fast reactor programme and (b) on the Atomic Energy Authority fusion programme.

Mr. Eggar: This is a management matter for the AEA. I am asking the chairman of the AEA to write to the hon. Member.

Insurance Agents

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will outline the powers available to him to resolve a failure to agree between the Securities and Investments Board and the Office of Fair Trading on disclosure rules for insurance agents.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

The Financial Services Act 1986 confers on the Treasury specific functions in relation to competition. In particular, sections 121(2) and (3) and 122(7) mean that the Treasury may exercise certain powers if, after receiving a report from the Director General of Fair Trading under section 122(4) or (6), it considers that any rules made by the Securities and Investments Board in the exercise of functions transferred it to have, or are intended or likely to have, to any significant extent the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition and that that effect is greater than is necessary for the protection of investors. The powers available under section 121(3) of the Financial Services Act are (a) to make an order resuming all or some of SIB's functions; and (b) to direct the agency to take specified steps for the purpose of securing that the rules do not have the relevant effect.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to decide upon, and publish, rules on disclosure for insurance agents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Rules on disclosure under the Financial Services Act 1986 are primarily a matter for the Securities and Investments Board and self-regulating organisations. The Director General of Fair Trading is currently considering the rules.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to promote discussions between the Securities and Investment Board and the Office of Fair Trading on disclosure rules for insurance agents.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Any such discussions are a matter for the bodies concerned.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many sets of draft rules on disclosure for insurance agents have been submitted to him.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

The Securities and Investments Board and the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation published detailed new rules on disclosure and standards of advice in connection with the marketing of life assurance on 22 July. They have stated that they will not be bringing the new rules into force until after they have been considered by the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the Office of Fair Trading report on the Securities and Investment Board's proposals on disclosure rules for insurance agents.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

The timing of any such report is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much of the Export Credits Guarantee Department support for medium-term credit between 1983 and 1987 was extended to defence equipment.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 November 1992]: ECGD does not record figures separately as between cash and credit sales. The figures exclude support provided by the now privatised Insurance Services Group.

1983-87
Total (£ million)	11,891
Defence (£ million)	1,726

Assisted Areas

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received in total for Great Britain to his consultation paper on assisted areas.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 16 November 1992]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 20 November, Official Report, column 434.

WALES

Acid Deposits

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what forecast he has made as to when acid depositions in all areas of Wales will fall below critical load levels.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As indicated by the maps on page 99 of "This Common Inheritance: The Second Year Report" (Cm 2068), we expect the area of Wales subject to acid depositions in excess of critical loads to be significantly reduced by 2005. It is not yet possible to forecast progress after that date.

Nitrogen Oxide

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many people in Wales currently live in areas which exceed European Community recommended levels of nitrogen oxide;

(2) if he will list the locations in Wales exceeding guidelines on ambient nitrogen dioxide levels published in EC directive 85/203;

(3) if he will list the locations in Wales which currently exceed World Health Organisation air quality guidelines for (a) hourly and (b) daily mean concentrations for nitrogen dioxide.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A research project "Survey of Nitrogen Dioxide Concentrations in the United Kingdom using Diffusion Tubes: July to December 1991", was undertaken in 1991. A copy of the published report is in the Library of the House. This report, based on monitoring carried out in both urban and rural areas, indicates that neither EC nor World Health Organisation (WHO) guidelines are being exceeded in Wales. However, in order to gain a picture of the trends in Wales, the Department is currently funding a nitrogen dixoide survey. This survey will be completed in early 1993 and will be published.

Carbon Dioxide

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the projected figures for carbon dioxide emissions in Wales for (a) 2005 and (b) 2020.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Projections of carbon dioxide emissions in 2005 and 2020 for the UK under a range of scenarios, were published in Energy Paper 59—Energy Related Carbon Emissions in Possible Future Scenarios for the United Kingdom, HMSO, October 1992—a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. The modelling work for these projections was carried out on a UK wide basis. Emissions have not been separately projected for Wales.

Water Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total tonnage of (a) xylene, (b) benezene and (c) methyl ethyl ketone which has been released into water in Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will list the number of known instances of such discharges which have taken place in each year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally. The consented volumes of discharges and the results of sampling of controlled waters undertaken by the National Rivers Authority are entered on to public registers maintained by the authority.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make representations to water authorities in Wales to secure that information on the monitoring of trade effluent consents and agreements concluded between industrial companies and the water authorities is made available to the general public.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the Water Industry Act 1991 details of consents for discharges to sewers issued by sewerage undertakers are available for public inspection. Under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 all controlled releases are subject to monitoring, upon which, as a condition of authorisation, data must be supplied to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, and placed on public registers.

Ozone Monitoring

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the total number of days where hourly ozone concentrations were classed as poor or very poor at each monitoring site in Wales in each year from 1985 onwards.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Monitoring of ozone levels in Wales commenced in 1987. Information for 1987-90 is published in Table 3.24 in the "Welsh Office Digest of Environmental Statistics No. 6", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. There were no days when concentrations were classed as poor—over 100 parts per billion—in 1991 and only two days in 1992, and at no time since 1987 have very poor levels—over 200 parts per billion—been recorded.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to produce a national sustainable development plan for Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 11 November 1992, Official Report, column 791, by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside.

Conservation Sites

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what guidelines are currently produced by his Department for local authorities concerning the wording of site safeguard policies for conservation sites contained in development plans;

(2) if he will list the local authority development plans which contain specific protection for sites of special scientific interest, Ramsar sites and special protection areas.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Planning policy guidance note 7, "The Countryside And The Rural Economy", includes advice on how local authority policies should take full account of designated areas, including particular references to national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty and sites of special scientific interest. All future development plans will be expected to reflect this advice.

Policies to protect designated areas including sites of special scientific interest are contained in the approved structure plans for Dyfed, Mid Glamorgan, South Glamorgan, Gwent, Powys, Clwyd and Gwynedd. No approved structure plans in Wales refer to Ramsar sites or special protection areas.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local nature reserves have been designated within each county council area of Wales in each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Two local nature reserves have been designated within the last five years. These are Mumbles Hill in West Glamorgan designated by Swansea city council in March 1989, and Howardian in South Glamorgan designated by Cardiff city council in July 1991.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to local authorities recommending the inclusion of landscape conservation in policies on nature conservation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Town and Country Planning Act 1990 (as amended) now requires local authorities, when drawing up their development plans, to include land use and development policies that are designed to secure the conservation of natural beauty and amenity of land and the improvement of the physical environment. Planning policy guidance note 12 (Wales), "Development Plans and Strategic Planning Guidance in Wales", advises that the development plan process should take account of the environmental implications of development, including the impact on landscape quality, and consider local options for conserving and improving the landscape.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities which have offered specific protection from mineral development to sites of special scientific interest within their structure plans.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Clwyd, Dyfed, Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan. In addition, Gwent county council has a structure plan on deposit which includes such a policy.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to local authorities to secure that structural development plans (a) regard woodlands as a habitat and (b) have regard for the protection of habitats other than woodland.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Advice to local planning authorities on the content of development plans is contained in planning policy guidance note 12 (Wales) "Development Plans and Strategic Planning Guidance in Wales". This indicates that structure plans should include land-use policies on, inter alia, conservation of the natural environment. Further advice will be contained in the forthcoming guidance on nature conservation.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number employed in the teaching profession, primary and secondary levels, in Wales in each of the last 10 years; and how many were employed on short-term contracts in each year.

	Primary	Secondary	Total
1982-83	12,800	14,968	27,768

1991-92	13,408	13,224	26,632

At January each year.

Information relating to teachers contracts was first collected in 1991-92, at which time there were 1,112 full-time and 899 part-time teachers in regular service employed on contracts of less than one year's duration in the nursery, primary and secondary sectors. A breakdown of the figures by sector is not available.

Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to amend the Use Classes Order so as to allow properties in the private rented and privately owned sectors to be covered by requirements for express consent when a property changes from housing individuals from within a local community to housing people from outside the community.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to review the procedure whereby planning permission is granted for the conversion of farm buildings into second homes.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department will publish an estimated figure for the new social housing units which will be required in Wales as a direct result of the implementation of the care in the community programme.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is not possible to make such an estimate at present. Information will only become available as a result of assessments of people's needs for social and community care, including housing, from 1 April 1993, when the provisions of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990 come into force. This information will be aggregated and summarised in the social care plans produced by local authorities, jointly with housing authorities, and published by 1 April annually.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the marina developments undertaken in Wales since 1980; how many houses and flats have been constructed as part of the marina schemes; and what proportion of such houses are currently second homes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Road Safety

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department is taking to encourage local highway authorities in Wales to carry out local safety schemes.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Officials are in regular contact with Welsh local authority representatives on the road casualty reduction working group. We also issue guidance to local authorities on such matters.

Shopping Developments

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local authority structure plans in Wales make reference to out-of-town shopping developments; and how many such plans presume against such developments.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Seven of the eight approved structure plans in Wales contain policies related to out-of-town shopping developments. One of the seven plans presumes against all forms of such development.

The procedures for Agriculture Departments' licences will ensure that operators have a fair chance to make any improvements needed and that, as far as possible, any special circumstances are considered before a decision on licensing is taken. The overriding criterion will be whether the hygiene status of the meat is put at risk by the method of operation in or the construction of the premises. In the event of the refusal of a licence, an operator will be able to appeal to the Meat Hygiene Appeals Tribunal.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to combat recent outbreaks of sheep scab in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The control of sheep scab is a matter for individual flock owners, who are well aware of the preventive measures and procedures needed to deal with it. All sheep farmers are being sent an advisory leaflet reminding them how to identify and deal with the disease. Where veterinary field staff see suspected disease at markets or on farms, advice is given and, where appropriate, action to safeguard animal welfare is taken. Following the outbreak in north Wales veterinary officers met farmers and undertook inspections in order to assess the extent of the disease and to ensure that animal welfare was protected.

Mrs Carolyn Jones

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the resignation of Mrs. Carolyn Jones from the board of the South Glamorgan health authority; when he expects to fill the vacancy; and what procedures he will use with regard to the soliciting of suggested names of qualified individuals and the drawing up of a short list.

Mr. David Hunt: I accepted Mrs. Jones' resignation with great regret as I believe she had a great deal to contribute to the running of the health service in South Glamorgan.

I intend filling the vacancy as soon as a suitable candidate has been identified. As concerns procedures, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 6 November 1992, Official Report, column 473.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the interim report of the director general of the Health and Safety Executive on market testing will be published and placed in the Library.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. This is an internal working document addressed to the Health and Safety Commission, whose advice on the feasibility of market testing those of HSE's activities not covered by its existing programme we are awaiting.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has to market-test the management board and executive of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have no such proposals. The Health and Safety Executive has a programme to market-test its service functions and the director general has been asked to investigate the feasibility of market testing those activities not covered by the existing programme, but not including policy advice or assistance to the Health and Safety Commission.

Household Statistics

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of children lived in households with a head in full-time employment (a) in 1987 and (b) 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates from the labour force survey show that, of the children aged 15 and under living in private households in Great Britain, the proportions whose head of household was in full-time employment was 73·5 per cent. in spring 1987, and 76·3 per cent. in spring 1990.

Parental Leave

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the proposal by the European Commission for a European parental leave directive providing parents with three months paid leave following the birth of a child.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government believe that such matters are best dealt with voluntarily, between employers and employees, according to their particular circumstances, and remain strongly opposed to the introduction of any such prescriptive measures.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees entitled to maximum compensatory awards from industrial tribunals in 1991 failed to obtain payment.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that the information is not available.

Wages Councils

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will indicate, separately for each wages council, the number of (a) males and (b) females living in (i) the city of York, (ii) North Yorkshire and (iii) Yorkshire and Humberside who are currently covered by wages council minimum pay rates.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is estimated that some 225,000 workers, aged 21 or over, are covered by the wages councils in the wages inspectorate's Yorkshire and Humberside division. I regret that there is no breakdown for men and women, for the workers covered by each council or for areas within the wages inspectorate division.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplaces in (a) the city of York, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) Yorkshire and Humberside are currently covered by each wages council minimum wage rates.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is estimated that some 35,000 establishments are covered by the wages councils in the wages inspectorate's Yorkshire and Humberside division. I regret that there is no breakdown of the number of establishments covered by each council or for areas within the wages inspectorate division.

Training

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what support is given by her Department to support training initiatives for young homeless people.

Mr. McLoughlin: All young people under 18 not in full-time education or employment are guaranteed the offer of a suitable training place on youth training if they want one. There is no requirement for trainees to have a permanent address.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of employment training leavers in the North Yorkshire training and enterprise council area found paid employment in (a) the 12 months to March 1991 and (b) the 12 months to March 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the proportion of ET leavers from North Yorkshire TEC who were in paid employment three months after leaving ET.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish figures showing the costs in 1991-92 and forecasts of the cost in 1992-93 of each of the training and job creation programmes for which her Department is or was responsible distinguishing in each case between allowances payable to scheme participants and other costs.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is given in the table. The 1992-93 figures exclude provision transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry with effect from 1 May 1992.

Appointments (Women)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are her objectives for the numbers of women to be appointed to public bodies in order to fulfil her percentage targets by 1996; and what number of men will be appointed to public bodies over the same period.

Mr. McLoughlin: The goal is that by 1996 30 per cent. of the public appointments made by my Department should be held by women. The current objectives to achieve this goal were announced on 16 November in "Public Appointments and Equal Opportunities", which is available in the Library. It is, however, not possible to forecast the numbers of men and of women who will be appointed over this period.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how she will use greater publicity to interest women in public bodies.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend intends to launch a series of regional "opportunity shops" for women in the new year to promote women's participation in all areas of public life. Their aim will be to publicise the whole range of opportunities open to women, including appointments to public bodies, regional and community appointments and voluntary work as well as employment and training.

Jobcentres

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State (1) for Employment what are the staff to customer ratios at (a) the Haslingden (Rossendale) jobcentre and (b) the Rawtenstall (Rossendale) jobcentre;

(2) if she will list the number of clients passing through (a) the Haslingden (Rossendale) jobcentre and (b) the Rawtenstall (Rossendale) jobcentre for each month since January;

(3) what studies have been undertaken, to assess the viability of the Haslingden (Rossendale) jobcentre as an integrated jobcentre/benefits office.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Ms. Janet Anderson, dated 24 November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Questions to her about Haslingden and Rawtenstall Jobcentres. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

My letter of 4 November explained that the decision to close the office at Haslingden was taken only after a full consultation process involving local interested parties. Prior to this, there had been a full review of the way services were being delivered in this part of Lancashire. A number of options were considered and it was concluded that we could make best use of our resources by transferring services to the new integrated office in Rawtenstall. Setting up an integrated office in Haslingden was not considered a feasible option because of the close proximity to the office in Rawtenstall; the lack of suitable premises and the relatively small number of clients involved.

You asked for information about the number of clients passing through the local offices at Haslingden and Rawtenstall. Unfortunately, we do not have this information since we do not count numbers of people who use certain enquiry aspect of our services. Even if figures were available, however, they would not provide a safe basis for comparison between the offices because of the very different nature of the services being provided at Haslingden and Rawtenstall.

At Haslingden clients attend for information about job vacancies and to declare continuing unemployment, but the full range of services is not available. At Rawtenstall there is a wide range of services and clients regularly attend to make claims for benefit; to declare their continuing unemployment; to receive advice on benefit queries; to be given help on jobsearch and for advisory interviews. Many people who use the Haslingden office need also to go to Rawtenstall for the wider range of help it provides.

There are three staff permanently based in Haslingden. They are primarily responsible for the delivery of services to aid jobsearch. At Rawtenstall there are 20·9 staff and two of them travel to Haslingden on one day per week to take evidence of unemployment. It is not possible to provide meaningful staff to customer ratios at either office.

Finally, let me reassure you that we monitor very closely the performance of our offices and keep our network closely under review.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committees of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Employment Agencies

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the systems of licensing employment agencies; why it is necessary to have such licences; and what plans she has to abolish them.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible only for the licensing system in the Employment Agencies Act 1973. We believe that some arrangement of this kind is necessary to safeguard the interests of users. Experience has shown that such protection is real.

Nevertheless, we are always concerned to reduce the number of licences involved in business activities wherever possible. We shall therefore keep the operation of the 1973 Act under review.

Licensing systems for seamen's and nurses' agencies are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Transport and the Secretary of State for Health respectively.

Redundancies

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies there have been in the west midlands in the last three months.

Mr. McLoughlin: Data on redundancies are now obtained from the quarterly labour force survey. The latest information available relates to spring 1992. This shows that in the three months prior to the survey 32,000 people were made redundant in the west midlands region.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies in Renfrew district have been notified to her Department since July; how many of these have been confirmed redundancies; if she will publish a table breaking down these redundancies by employer, job centre, standard industrial classification and those resulting from company closure or bankruptcy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Figures on notification of redundancies are not held for areas smaller than economic regions.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Minister in her Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of her Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters within the Employment Department.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which her Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April;

(2) if she will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which her Department has responsibility, which her Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Industrial Training (Road Transport Board) (Revocation) Order 1992 wound up the road transport industrial training board, leaving employers to decide how and what to spend on training.

The following measures have been approved by Ministers and, subject to parliamentary approval, will come into effect from 1 January 1993, implementing EC directives on health and safety:

The Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations;
The Provision and Use of Work Equipment Regulations;
The Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations;
The Manual Handling Operations Regulations;
The Personal Protective Equipment at Work Regulations;
The Display Screen Equipment Regulations.

The Health and Safety Commission, with the approval of my right hon. Friend, has taken the opportunity presented by the need to implement these directives to rationalise existing law and remove unnecessary requirements. Taken together, they will repeal nearly 80 regulations in whole or part, and some 40 sections of Acts.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what qualifications are required by those engaged in assessing national vocational qualifications.

Mr. McLoughlin: The national standards for assessment of national vocational qualifications (NVQs), published in 1991, have been endorsed by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications.

Nearly all NVQ awarding bodies have already made a commitment to move towards requiring their assessors to be qualified to these national standards. The National Council for Vocational Qualifications is meeting with awarding bodies shortly to agree a time scale for the introduction of such a requirement.

Remploy

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements have been put in place for improving the effectiveness of Remploy.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend the Viscount Ullswater, on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, has written to the chairman of Remploy approving the first annual performance agreement between the Department and the company. This agreement covers the year from 1 April 1992. It has been negotiated by the chief executive of the Employment Service, on behalf of my right hon. Friend, since new financing arrangements were established between the Department and Remploy in March 1992.

We have agreed targets which are realistic but stretching. These are:

The average number of disabled people employed by Remploy Ltd. will be 8,650, subject to a tolerance of ± 3 per cent.

At least 190 disabled employees will move from Remploy factories to opportunities under the Interwork scheme or to open employment, or from Interwork to open employment.

The average number of disabled people employed in opportunities under the Interwork scheme will be 675, subject to a tolerance of ± 5 per cent.

Remploy will keep within an operating deficit of £81·25 million—which, on average numbers of 8,650, will give a cost per disabled worker of £9,393.

I have arranged for the text of the annual performance agreement to be placed in the Library today.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

10. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet the US defence chiefs to discuss nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I next expect to meet Secretary Cheney when we are both in Brussels on 10 and 11 December for the meeting of NATO's defence planning committee.

27. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent studies he has commissioned or received about the safety of British nuclear weapons.

Mr. Aitken: The only recent authoritative study of the safety of UK nuclear weapons has been the review undertaken by a working group led by the Ministry of Defence's chief scientific adviser. The report of this review was publsihed in July this year and copies have been placed in the House of Commons Library. The review provides welcome corroboration of our confidence in the safety of our nuclear weapons.

Regiments (Amalgamation)

11. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now reconsider the proposed amalgamation of the Staffordshire and Cheshire regiments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The amalgamation of the Cheshire regiment and the Staffordshire regiment is due to take place in August 1993 and there is currently no reason why it should not go ahead.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on plans to amalgamate Scottish regiments and battalions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have received numerous representations, all of which I have noted.

Royal Naval Reserve

13. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding the future of the Royal Naval Reserve; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have received a number of representations. Following the publication of the open government document "The Future of Britain's Reserve Forces", work is under way on the future use of the Royal Navy's volunteer and ex-regular reserves and this will take due account of relevant representations received.

European Fighter Aircraft

14. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the future of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Rifkind: The two studies that were commissioned by the four Governments in August have now reported and I plan to meet with my German, Italian and Spanish counterparts in December to discuss the results. The industrial study has shown that significant reductions in the cost of the aircraft are possible. The report on the second study—a reassessment of the operational requirement by our chiefs of staff—has only just been received and I am considering its conclusions.

22. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the current situation regarding the intergovernmental talks concerning the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans).

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from trade unions concerning the European fighter aircraft and its implications for future employment.

Mr. Aitken: On 29 October I met a trade union delegation representing employees at Rolls-Royce, British Aerospace, Lucas Aerospace and GEC-Ferranti. My Department has also received letters from trade union representatives at GEC-Ferranti in Edinburgh and at GEC Avionics at Rochester.

Shipbuilding Industry

15. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to assist the shipbuilding industry by his policy for procurement.

Mr. Aitken: Our policy is to place orders for ships by competition wherever possible, inviting all yards capable of undertaking the work to tender. This has encouraged the great efforts shipbuilders have been making to reduce overheads and improve their efficiency and competitiveness.

Arms Sales (Middle East)

16. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his Ministry's policy towards the export of military equipment and technology to Iran and Iraq.

Mr. Aitken: Our policy is to support the UN embargo on exports to Iraq, and to permit exports to Iran only within the policy announced by the then Foreign Secretary on 29 October 1985.

23. Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the advice given by his Department concerning the export of military technology to the middle east prior to the Gulf war.

Mr. Aitken: My Department gave and continues to give advice to other Government Departments on the military implications of specific defence exports.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek permission from Mr. Frank Machon of the Polmadie Storage and Packing Company Ltd. of Glasgow to make public his correspondence with Her Majesty's Government on the matter of military equipment sales from the United Kingdom to Iraq, Iran and other states on the list of sensitive nations for United Kingdom exports.

Mr. Aitken: Mr. Machon may, if he wishes, publish his own letters to Ministers and officials in my Department and their replies to him. He has repeatedly been asked to produce evidence to substantiate his allegations which have already been published in the press.

Bosnia

17. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been carried out into the ability of the armed forces to carry out discretionary commitments in addition to deployment in Bosnia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We attach great importance to ensuring that future force levels are appropriate for the tasks which the armed forces are asked to undertake and that we do not impose upon them any requirement to which they cannot properly respond. We continue to monitor the position carefully in the light of present and likely future commitments.

25. Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the latest progress on the deployment of troops in Bosnia.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member of Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin) today.

WE177 Nuclear Bomb

18. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb is expected to reach the end of its operational life.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb is expected to remain serviceable well into the first decade of the next century.

Animals (Tests)

19. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which species of animals are currently used by his Department or its agents for test purposes; and what tests are carried out.

Mr. Aitken: The species of animals currently used for experimental purposes are rats, mice, rabbits, guinea pigs and rhesus monkeys. All experiments involving the use of animals fully meet the spirit and letter of the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Yugoslavia

20. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest information available to him about the position of United Kingdom troops in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Rifkind: Regular reports are now placed in the Library of the House each Thursday.

29. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the further participation of British troops in former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans for any additional use of British troops over and above those escorting humanitarian aid convoys, including convoys of detainees.

30. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the level of air cover generally and operational aerial intelligence and surveillance available to the United Kingdom commander and his convoys in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Air support is not part of the concept of the deployment and would fundamentally alter the nature of the operation, risking escalation. NATO airborne early warning aircraft are conducting air surveillance of the Adriatic and Bosnia-Herzegovina, but this is to detect violations of UN sanctions and the no-fly zone, not to provide cover for ground forces.

RAF Sealand

21. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will visit RAF Sealand to discuss future developments on the site.

Mr. Aitken: I intend to visit RAF Sealand on Wednesday 9 December.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has met the secretary-general of WEU on a number of occasions since taking up office. Their discussions have covered a wide range of issues.

"Options for Change"

28. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he is making with the implementation of the changes outlined in "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) earlier today.

Autumn Statement

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to report on the implications of the autumn statement on defence expenditure for defence establishments in Wiltshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The new expenditure plans announced in the autumn statement will allow us to maintain the direction for Defence set out in "Britain's Defence for the 90s" and the requirements of the defence policies most recently set out in the 1992 Statement on the Defence Estimates. We will continue to implement the present plans for restructuring and reorganisation, including those affecting defence establishments in Wiltshire. Any further adjustments to individual defence commitments and capabilities will be considered during the course of the normal annual recosting of the defence programme as a whole and will be announced in due course where appropriate.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received in response to defence issues raised by the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Three parliamentary questions, including the hon. Member's, have sought information or a statement from Defence Ministers in the light of the autumn statement. One letter has been received from a Member of Parliament. The Government remain committed to armed forces which, while smaller, will be properly manned and supported and better equipped.

Trooping the Colour

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much Trooping the Colour was estimated to have cost in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 30 June 1992, Official Report, column 513.

Low Flying

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many investigations into incidents involving low-flying jets in Wales were conducted in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of RAF police investigations following complaints about low-flying aircraft in Wales in each year since January 1989 is as follows:

	Number
1989	61
1990	73
1991	74
[1]1992	85

[1] Up to 31 October 1992.

Stolen Documents

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature of Ministry of Defence documents stolen from post office premises in Kilbirnie street, Glasgow.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A Ministry of Defence document was stolen from the Parcelforce Glasgow distribution centre, Kilbirnie street, Glasgow on 17 November 1992 but was recovered within the depot. It is not the policy to disclose the nature of stolen documents.

Files (Disposal)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how many years his Department holds files before shredding or other means of disposal.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The retention and disposal of Ministry of Defence files are governed by the requirement of the Public Records Acts of 1958 and 1967. Files are reviewed at various stages after closure, in the light of their possible administrative or historical value, and those which are not selected for ultimate permanent preservation at the Public Record Office may be destroyed almost immediately or held for periods up to 85 years, depending upon their content and continued departmental utility.

Trident

12. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about planned expenditure on the Trident programme in 1993-94.

Mr. Aitken: Our current estimate for capital expenditure on the Trident programme in the financial year 1993-94 is £827 million.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to paragraph 1, page 28, of the Statement on the Defence Estimates, if possible future revisions of the assessment of the number of nuclear warheads that need to be deployed on each Trident submarine will include raising the self-imposed maximum limit of 128.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government have long made it clear that their planning for the Trident force is based on deploying in each Trident submarine no more than 128 warheads.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his policy to deploy a front-end on the United Kingdom's Trident missiles that will be capable of carrying more than eight warheads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The actual number of warheads which will be carried by the D5 missile in United Kingdom service, and the maximum number that could be, is classified information. The Government have, however, made it clear that each United Kingdom Trident submarine will carry no more than 128 warheads.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the last three years; for each of the last three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information on reports produced by external consultants working in the Home Office during the past three years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

999 System

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received regarding proposed changes in the 999 system; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he is having, and with whom, regarding proposed changes in the 999 system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The review of the 999 system is primarily a matter for the Director General of OFTEL. Any representations that we have received against OFTEL's proposals for a call handling agency have therefore been passed to his office. Some organisations have represented to us that changes should not lead to any deterioration in the service to the public. We share their views, as does the Director General of OFTEL.

Matters relating to 999 calls are discussed by the Home Office's 999 liaison committee which has representatives from the emergency authorities and the public telecommunications operators as well as from OFTEL. There are also bilateral discussions, as appropriate, between the Home Office and the police and fire services.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the adequacy of the powers of the courts to deal with juvenile offenders; what proposals he has for a change in the law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have received a number of representations about juvenile offending, especially about frequent offending by what appears to be a comparatively small number of youngsters. My right hon. and learned Friend and I understand and share the concerns that have been expressed. We are therefore looking urgently at the existing arrangements for responding to this kind of offending behaviour before deciding what new measures, including possible changes in the law, it might be sensible to introduce.

Primary Purpose Rule

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for permanent residency in the United Kingdom have been refused under the primary purpose rule in each year since 1985.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on reasons for refusal, and thus on refusals under the primary purpose rule, is only available centrally for the Indian sub-continent and is given in the table. It is known that the vast majority of refusals under the primary purpose rule relate to persons applying in the Indian sub-continent.

Prisons (Payphones)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the London prisons which now have payphones that can be used by inmates.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Cardphones are available for prisoners' use at all the London prisons save Wormwood Scrubs, where installation work is in progress and should be completed shortly.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I am.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were granted entry to the United Kingdom from former Yugoslavia (a) in the two weeks prior to 5 November and (b) from 5 November to 19 November.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Comprehensive information on admissions of passengers to the United Kingdom is collected on a monthly, but not a weekly basis.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Deregulatory measures have been taken to improve immigration controls.

Service standards for the time taken for passenger clearance at Heathrow and Gatwick were published in July 1992. A separate channel for the rapid clearance of cars occupied by European Community nationals was introduced at Dover on 1 July 1992.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No measures increasing regulation have been put into effect since 9 April 1992.

Oxford Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has as to the long-term future role of Oxford prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Oxford prison is currently being used on a temporary basis to hold prisoners from London establishments while refurbishment work is carried out, and from Cardiff prison to avoid use of police cells. It is intended to return the buildings to Oxford county council but no decision has yet been taken on when this will be.

Music

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to treat live and recorded music in pubs in the same way in respect of licensing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: At present, music and singing may take place without a public entertainment licence in a public house where they are provided solely either by the reproduction of recorded sound, or by not more than two performers. We have no plans to amend this exemption.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been charged with attempting to smuggle drugs into prisons while visiting a prison inmate at a prison in England or Wales during the period 1 January to 1 November.

Mr. Jack: Information is not available on the number of persons charged. The number of visitors suspected of involvement in such offences and apprehended by the police in this period is 202.

House Burglaries

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many house burglaries were recorded in the Blyth and north Tyneside areas in 1990 and 1991; and how many arrests were made in each of those areas in each year in connection with house burglaries.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected centrally for the Blyth and north Tyneside areas. The table shows the number of prosecutions at Blyth Valley and north Tyneside petty sessional divisions for burglary in a dwelling in 1990 and 1991 (provisional).

Operation Container

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he now expects to be the total cost of Operation Container in looking after remand prisoners in police cells in Greater Manchester and elsewhere.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the following table which relates to the whole police cells operation in England and Wales. Separate figures for remand prisoners are not collected centrally.

Financial period	Payments to Greater Manchester police £	Payments to other police forces £
1990-91	15,931,767	37,581,143
1991-92	20,522,278	74,217,700

Immigration (Members' Inquiries)

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what review process has been undertaken of the direct telephone answer service for right hon. and hon. Members who have inquiries relating to immigration and asylum applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Details of the direct telephone answer service to Lunar house for Members who have inquiries relating to immigration and asylum applications were outlined in my letter of 26 May to all Members.

I am not aware of any problems arising from those arrangements which might call for a review and I encourage my colleagues to make full use of this facility.

Interpretation Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what statutory obligations the prison department lies to provide interpretation services to serving prisoners in appropriate circumstances in gaols in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison service is not under any statutory obligations to provide interpretation services to prisoners, but makes every effort to meet such needs where they arise.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what statutory obligation the police authorities in England and Wales lie to provide interpretation services in appropriate cases for persons being interviewed in pursuance of criminal investigations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The codes of practice issued under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 prescribe that a person who has difficulty in understanding English may not be interviewed by police officers except in the presence of an interpreter.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what statutory obligation the Crown or magistrates courts lie to provide interpretation services in appropriate circumstances in criminal proceedings in England and Wales.

Mr. Jack: Section 3 of the Welsh Courts Act 1942 allows the Lord Chancellor to make rules for the provision of interpreters of the Welsh and English languages for the purposes of proceedings before courts in Wales, while section 1(1) of the Welsh Language Act 1967 requires that provision for interpretation shall be made in legal proceedings in Wales. In other circumstances the provision of interpreters is not governed by statute. I understand, however, that an interpreter is provided as a matter of course when required and that a trial of a defendant who was unable to speak or understand English and who was not provided with a suitable interpreter would be a nullity.

Emergency Underground Facilities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the underground facilities for war-time or emergency use in the regions of England and Wales which are to be (a) retained and (b) sold.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are two protected sites in each of the nine home defence regions in England and Wales, except for London (region 5), which has one. We do not plan to retain any. Only four can be sold; the other 13 are leasehold.

Regional Crime Squads

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each regional crime squad in England and Wales the dates of publication of each report.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Before April 1992, reports of inspections of regional crime squads were confidential.

The first published report was that of the inspection of No. 8 regional crime squad. It was published on 15 September 1992. The inspection report of No. 9 regional crime squad is expected to be published on 27 November 1992.

Sirens

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sirens are being disposed of as a result of reviewing civil defence requirements; and of these, how many are hand-held and how many are fixed units.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are some 6,700 power sirens and 9,760 hand sirens. All will be disposed of except for an estimated 300 power sirens which are used for flood warning purposes where the local authorities concerned wish to retain them.

False Statements

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place under the Magistrates Courts Act 1980 for false statements made in witness statements, taken pre-trial, or under any similar legislative provision re-enacted in the 1980 Act since 1980.

Mr. Jack: The information, available centrally for the years 1980 to 1991 (provisional), is given in the table. It is not possible to distinguish offences under section 106 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980, from other offences of perjury involving untruthful written statements or unlawful statements under oath.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many underground facilities for use in wartime or emergencies in England and Wales are to be (a) retained and (b) disposed of.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 24 November 1992]: I plan to dispose of as many as possible of the 17 sites.

Departmental Records

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how many years his Department holds files before shredding or other means of disposal.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 24 November 1992]: The Home Office reviews and disposes of its records in accordance with the Public Records Act 1958 and 1967. The majority of files are destroyed after five to 10 years and most of the remainder after 30 years.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in each of the past six months; and in what circumstances.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 24 November 1992]: I signed two certificates, one in June and the other in September, in connection with the proceedings in R. v. Henderson and Others. They related to the disclosure of any oral or documentary evidence relating to certain aspects of the work of the security and intelligence services. In July, I siged a certificate relating to communications between police forces or prosecuting authorities in connection with the detection and investigation of crime and the apprehension of offenders, in proceedings brought for judicial review of a decision by magistrates to commit a defendant on charges of dishonesty. I signed another certificate in July, relating to the disclosure of certain categories of information contained in the Prison Service Control and Restraint Manual, in proceedings for damages for personal injuries brought by prison officers.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Wages Councils

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in employment in Northern Ireland are covered by wages council agreements.

Mr. Atkins: A total of 34,310 at 31 December 1991.

TRANSPORT

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what use his Department has made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle My Department has used private investigators and similar firms:

(a) to hand serve summonses when taking prosecutions for failure to pay vehicle excise duty;

(b) to hand serve papers on people who have trespassed on the Department's land and to photograph trespassers;

(c) to establish the whereabouts of people believed to have caused damage to the Department's roads and structures for the purpose of making claims against them;

(d) to trace former employees who were overpaid before they left the Department's employ and

(e) in one case to investigate the activities of an employee

Several firms have been used and the full cost for each year could be established only at disproportionate cost but the cost of tracing an individual is usually in the range of £60 to £90 per case.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 18 November 1992]: As far as can be established without disproportionate cost, my Department has engaged a private detective on only one occasion since 1979 to investigate the activities of a British citizen. A detective was employed in 1992 to investigate a member of staff following complaints received from members of the public.

M3, Winchester

Mr. Malone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that the contracts for the work of the final link of the M3 at Winchester are able to proceed effectively;

(2) if he will make a statement about the progress on the measures to preserve the ecology on the M3 road scheme at Winchester.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This work is not progressing as well as we would have expected. Work to facilitate the removal of valuable plant material from the Itchen valley water meadows and replanting at an alternative site in the Test valley has been completed, but similar rescue work in the Dongas has been hampered by protestors. If this rescue work is not completed, valuable plants will be lost, and damage is already being done to these plants by the trespassers on the Dongas site.

It is of much regret that these disruptive forces are now affecting our main works contract which started on 19 October. The schedule for completion is very testing for our contractors in line with our aims of completing this missing section of the M3 motorway, reducing the harmful effects of congestion and improving road safety. In respect of both the ecological rescue work and the main construction, we and our contractors will be using all reasonable means to remove trespassers.

Illegal action of this sort jeopardises effective rescue and puts both workers and protestors at risk.

Untaxed Vehicles

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to change the law relating to untaxed vehicles parked or abandoned on the public highway so as to allow them to be removed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Local authorities and the police have powers to remove vehicles that are illegally, obstructively or dangerously parked, abandoned or broken down. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency works closely with local authorities in cases where unlicensed vehicles appear to be abandoned. We have no plans to introduce powers to enable untaxed vehicles to be removed from the road.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what proportion of his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances becomes controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(2) what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere;

(3) what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by his Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use.

Mr. MacGregor: Records are not kept centrally for the disposal of controlled waste. The Department's policy is to comply with the duty of care which came into force on 1 April 1992 under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The duty makes producers of controlled waste responsible for ensuring that it is disposed of safely and legally.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how the departmental green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department participates in interdepartmental discussions about measures to protect the ozone layer. Our Procurement Manual specifically covers the need to avoid ozone—depleting substances. These substances will also be covered in the environmental guidance which we are preparing for the management of our properties. It is already our policy to phase out all halon fire extinguishers in the accommodation we occupy.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many chlorofluorocarbon and hydrochlorofluorocarbon installations are contained within his Department's buildings; and how many CFC domestic fridges are contained within his Department buildings;

(2) what quantity of HCFC 22 is purchased by his Department per annum;

(3) how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in his Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems;

(4) if he will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in his Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling;

(5) what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within his Department and returned to the manufacturer.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department does not keep central records of plant and equipment installed or held in premises used by its staff; or items subject to local procurement and recycling arrangements. It is the Department's policy to phase out the use of ozone-depleting chemicals as soon as possible.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes for the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by his Department.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department of the Environment is the main source of guidance. Its advice is circulated to all procurement and property managers in the Department.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals;

(2) which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department's policy is to phase out the use of ozone-depleting chemicals as soon as possible. The Department is reviewing the detailed application of the policy with the managers responsible for property and procurement.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much funding has been allocated or spent to deal specifically with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. MacGregor: Measures to reduce the consumption of ozone-depleting substances are included in the Departments general maintenance programme. The costs are not recorded separately.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within his Department buildings in the last five years.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department does not have records going back five years. There was a failure at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre, Swansea in May 1991. An air-conditioning unit failed and released 800 kg of refrigerant R12 into the atmosphere.

Speed Limiters

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to make representations to the car industry concerning the installation of mechanical speed limiters on all new cars.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. This should be a decision for vehicle manufacturers and purchasers.

Rail Services (Franchising)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the individuals and organisations who responded to the consultation document, "The Franchising of Passenger Rail Services"; and if he will publish a summary of the views expressed by each respondent, within the limits of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Freeman: In inviting responses to the consultation document, we undertook that all responses would be treated as strictly confidential. It would not be appropriate, therefore, for me to list those who have responded or to summarise their views.

Shipping Records

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy for new arrangements for the General Register and Record Office of Shipping and Seamen to include requirements which specifically protect the whole range of interdependent records currently held by the office in their entirety and in perpetuity.

Mr. Norris: The records are retained under Public Records Office (PRO) rules and we will want to ensure that this continues to be the case in the future.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the need to satisfy the provisions of the Acquired Rights directive and the protection of employment rights in the event of any transfer of undertakings operated by his Department or responsible to his Department.

Mr. Norris: The provisions of EC Directive 77/187 ("The Acquired Rights Directive") are given effect in the United Kingdom by the Tranfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations, 1981. These regulations provide that transfers which fall within their scope will not operate to terminate the employees' contracts of employment, which will continue as if made between the transferee and the employees. Whether any particular transfer is covered by the regulations will depend on the circumstances of each case.

Disabled Passengers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what specific protection he intends shall be provided for disabled people in the event of any change in the organisation, structure or funding of the rail network.

Mr. Freeman: Our privatisation proposals envisage a duty on the rail regulator to take into account the interests of persons with disabilities which would be reflected in obligations imposed on railway operators through the regulator's licensing regime.

British Rail

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when Her Majesty's Government were informed of British Rail's decision to make 5,000 staff redundant.

Mr. Freeman: My Department was aware that the British Railways Board was considering a voluntary severance scheme to enable it to reduce costs in line with falling income. The specific plans were advised to my Department on 19 November 1992.

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the planned subsidy for British Rail for each year in the period 1993-94 to 1995-96 in real terms.

Mr. Freeman: The specific allocation of the planned external financing limits for British Rail for 1993-94 to 1995-96 between grant and borrowing has yet to be agreed and will be announced, as usual, in due course.

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the Government's current plans for the privatisation of the British Rail network.

Mr. Freeman: We continue to make good progress on the detailed arrangements for rail privatisation based on the principles set out in the White Paper "New Opportunities for the Railways" (Cm. 2012). Legislation will be introduced in this session.

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government to abolish the subsidy for Network SouthEast.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend will be discussing in due course with the chairman of British Rail objectives for the board in the period from 1 April 1993. Our policy is to invite the private sector to operate BR services through franchising. This will bring greater responsiveness to passengers' needs, better services and improved efficiency. Should subsidy still be required for socially necessary services it will be provided.

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the level of Government subsidy to British Rail in real terms in each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is in the following table:

£ million—1992-93 prices

	PSO grant	Level crossing grant	Total
1987-88	1,031	31	1,062
1988-89	676	29	705
1989-90	592	31	623
1990-91	669	32	701
1991-92	930	28	958

Market Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to subject the General Register and Record Office of Shipping and Seamen to market testing.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 19 November 1992]: The registry will be market tested in line with the White Paper Cmnd 1730, "Competing for Quality", which set out the Government's intention to give new impetus to the drive for better value for money and improved service to the public.

The functions will be tested against the quality of service and value for money available from alternative sources and the tender process will follow the Department's normal rules for competitive tendering.

The existing staff at RSS will have the opportunity to put forward an in-house bid on the same basis and timescale as outside bidders.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy for market testing which involves any part of his Department or a body responsible to his Department to include the status quo as one of the options, against which any other options are to be measured before any decision is taken.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend will follow the procedures for market testing Department of Transport functions set out in the White Paper, "Competing for Quality", (Cmnd 1730).

Road Schemes, East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the prospects for road schemes in Suffolk and Norfolk in 1993-94, particularly the A12 and the A47, in the light of the autumn statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The settlement announced in the autumn statement should enable my Department to maintain spending on new trunk road provision at record levels. While I expect all schemes planned to start works next year to go ahead I cannot at this stage confirm the exact position on individual schemes as other factors, such as the completion of any remaining procedures, have to be taken into account.

Schemes to improve the A12 and A47 in Norfolk and Suffolk are currently at varying stages of development largely at the beginning of processes. The timing of future events could be influenced by this and by competing demands on available resources.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take on the representations he has received from the Magistrates Association for stronger enforcement and penalties for overloaded and unsafe heavy goods vehicles, including penalty points on operators' licences.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 23 November 1992]: I am concerned to ensure that enforcement in respect of heavy goods vehicles, including the penalties imposed on offenders for overloading and operating vehicles in a mechanically unsafe condition, should provide an adequate deterrent. I will give careful consideration to proposals I receive from the Magistrates Association which will help to ensure that operators fulfil their obligations under the Licensing regime.

Road Signs (Tourism)

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons his Department has not yet responded to (a) applications made in September 1991, for permission to have tourist directional signs erected saying Historic Harwich and Harwich Redoubt on the roadside at the Parkeston junction A120 and (b) an application made in April 1992, for signs at Main Road/Barrack Lane A136 in Harwich; if he will now give permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 23 November 1992]: On 13 August this year my Department received a request from Essex County Council for authorisation of a tourist sign saying "Harwich Redoubt" to be erected at the junction of Main road and Barrack lane in Harwich, not at the A120 Parkeston roundabout. Authorisation was given on 28 August.

The Department has received no other applications for similar signs but we understand that Essex county council has been in correspondence with the promoters of such signs, and the county surveyor is writing to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications for permission to erect tourist directional signs are currently pending with his Department; and if he will state for how long each has been pending.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 23 November 1992]: There are currently 22 applications pending. Applications frequently call for detailed negotiation with the tourist board, the local highway authority, and the attraction operator. These negotiations can take some time; successful conclusion requires the agreement of all parties. At present pending applications have been with the Department as follows:

	Applications
Less than 1 month	9
Between 1 and 3 months	5
Between 3 and 6 months	3
Between 6 and 12 months	3
Over 12 months	2

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he considers when asked to approve or reject applications for tourist directional signs to be erected.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 23 November 1992]: To be eligible for signing, tourist attractions must be recognised by the appropriate regional tourist board and the highway authority. The criteria used to consider applications are set out in the Department's circular, Roads 1/91, a copy of which is in the Library.

Nuclear Material

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had concerning the principle of unlimited and absolute state liability for damage to citizens and the environment in the event of an accident involving the proposed shipment of plutonium from Sellafield to Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

No arrangements have been made at this stage for the shipment of plutonium from the United Kingdom to Japan. Liability for an accident arising from shipments of plutonium would be governed by relevant domestic and foreign law.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Correspondence

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Delyn of 15 July, acknowledged on 1 September, concerning the rights of claimants of the disability living allowance under the citizens charter where there is a delay in processing their application for disability living allowance.

Mr. Waldegrave: This case was referred to the Department of Social Security on 22 July and acknowledged by them on 1 September. Any further questions should be directed to that Department.

Leukaemia

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much Government funding is available for research into leukaemia.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Medical Research Council, the main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related research in the United Kingdom, is funded by grant-in-aid from the science budget through this Department, and is an independent body which normally decides its research priorities on its own expert judgment. In the last financial year, 1991-92, the council's expenditure on projects directly on and related to leukaemia research was £5·4 million. Information on expenditure on leukaemia research by university departments and medical schools or health departments and authorities is not collected centrally.

Citizens Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress toward the implementation of the citizens charter.

Mr. Waldegrave: A White Paper on the citizens charter will be published today. This will give details on progress so far. I shall be making a statement this afternoon.

Research Centres

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list (a) the interdisciplinary research centres established to date by each research council and those planned to be established in the future, (b) the percentage of the total budget of each research council spent on interdisciplinary research centres each year since the programme began and (c) the total number of staff employed in interdisciplinary research centres and the percentage of those staff who are seconded to interdisciplinary research centres from universities; and if he will make a statement on interdisciplinary research centres.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 3 November 1992]: The Government recognise the value of interdisciplinary research across classical discipline boundaries, and have already provided substantial additional funding of £75 million for such research through the interdisciplinary research centre (IRC) initiative.

The information requested is as follows:

(a) Interdisciplinary research centres established to date

ENVIRONMENT

Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take on the decision of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to allow public access to emissions data of power stations run by PowerGen and National Power.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 19 November 1992, Official Report, column 304.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many spaces have been provided at sites for travellers, under the Caravan Sites Act 1968, in each local authority area since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson) on 23 November 1992, Official Report, column 536.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total capital expenditure on the provision of sites under the Caravan Sites Act 1968, listed by local authorities since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: Information is not available in the form requested. A total of £56·2 million was expended on the provision of local authority gipsy sites in England between 1979-80 and 1991-92 inclusive. £12·5 million has been allocated for gipsy sites grant in England for the current financial year.

Urban Programme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the changes to the urban programme will have on voluntary organisations in Lancashire.

Mr. Robin Squire: Commitments arising from voluntary sector projects approved as part of Blackburn, Burnley and Preston's urban programmes in 1992-93 and previous years will be honoured.

In addition, the urban partnership fund, part of the capital partnership programme which was announced by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment on 13 November 1992, will provide up to £20 million in 1993-94 in uncommitted urban programme resources to support capital and directly linked revenue projects in the 57 urban priority areas. It is open to local authorities to involve voluntary organisations in particular projects.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources have been made available, under the Government's urban programme, to meet the housing needs of Wythenshawe.

Mr. Robin Squire: The urban programme has offered substantial help with the regeneration of run down private sector housing and local authority estates but it is not the Government's policy that UP resources are used for direct housing investment. The urban programme has complemented other initiatives such as support for environmental improvements and enterprise initiatives on estates benefitting from estate action or equivalent treatment, and to secure benefits for the community as a whole rather than individual households.

This year over £700,000 has been specifically marked from the urban programme for Wythenshawe of which £17,000 is to fund a strategic action plan for the economic regeneration of the Benchill area to complement estate action work. The action plan will recommend a range of measures to improve local resident's access to employment and training.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the (a) gross and (b) net capital allocation in outturn figures for local authority housing in each district council in the north-east, expressed as a cost per dwelling unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The table shows the allocation of annual capital guideline and estate action resources in 1992-93 to local authorities in the Northern region and expresses this as an amount per local authority dwelling (based on 1991 estimates). Allocations reflect the varying condition of local authority stock throughout the region, and the impact of targetting resources on the worst housing estates through the estate action programme.

The table does not include resources allocated during the year under other special initiatives such as the rural housing initiative and "Living over the Shop", which are channelled through the local authority to enable housing associations to develop new or improved dwellings. Allocations are also made to local authorities to deal with the improvement of the private sector stock.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the raising borrowing limits on local authority housing activity in real terms for the financial years 1979-80 to date, excluding the use of capital receipts.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 16 November 1992]: The available information, which relates to housing investment programme (HIP) allocations, is given below. The figures for the years up to 1989-90 are borrowing approvals for housing capital expenditure. Changes were made to the capital control regime at the beginning of 1990-91 which mean that borrowing approvals are no longer issued for capital expenditure on specific services; borrowing approval is now conveyed by a single, all service credit approval. The HIP allocations are now an assessment of relative need for housing capital expenditure. The table also gives figures for local authority housing capital expenditure.

[1] Allocations for the years up to and including 1989-90 are final allocations, ie the initial allocation plus any increases to the initial allocation made in-year. The allocations figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are the HIP allocations (housing annual capital guidelines plus specified capital grants) issued prior to the start of the financial year. They exclude any subsequent increases approved through the issue of supplementary credit approvals (SCAs). SCAs issued for 1990-91 and the provisional total for 1991-92 are £216 million and £317 million respectively. A total of £464 million has been set aside for 1992-93 for distribution as SCAs.

Housing for the Elderly

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Ernst and Young management consultative study commissioned by his Department into the housing needs for the elderly to be completed and published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Department anticipates that the study of the housing needs of elderly and disabled people currently being undertaken by Ernst and Young management consultants will be completed by the end of this year. It is expected that there will then be a series of reports covering different elements of the study with the first being published at the beginning of next year. The Department does not consider it necessary to make a statement at this stage but may do so when the first report is published.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce a mortgage benefit or mortgage-to-rent scheme to assist home owners who are in arrears with their mortgage and who face the prospect of their homes being repossessed and the prospect of homelessness.

Mr. Baldry: Lenders have introduced a range of measures this year, following the discussions between the Government and the Council of Mortgage Lenders in December 1991, including mortgage-to-rent to help borrowers at risk of repossession. Lenders estimate that these measures will save some 55,000 repossessions this year.

Interest rates have been reduced by 3 per cent. in the last two months, bringing the total reduction since October 1990 to 8 per cent. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his autumn statement a package of £750 million for the purchase of empty properties overhanging the housing market.

We have no plans to introduce a mortgage benefit scheme.

Housing, North-west England

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the regional housing needs indicator figures published by the Housing Corporation for the north-west; and how far the housing investment programme is meeting the urgent need for local authority homes to be improved and repaired in the Wythenshaw constituency.

Mr. Baldry: The Housing Corporation recently published the Housing Needs Indicator (HNI) for 1993-94. The score for the corporation's north-west region has risen from 10·39 per cent. this year to 10·8 per cent. next year. After compensation for the differing costs between regions, the share of the corporation's annual development programme (ADP) allocated to the north-west will be 9·21 per cent. in 1993-94 compared with 8·92 per cent. this year.

The HNI is a composite, relative indicator of the incidence of housing needs in different geographical areas in England. It is reviewed annually by a working group of the Department of the Environment, the Housing Corporation and the National Federation of Housing Associations.

Manchester's housing investment programme allocation for 1992-93 was £34·867 million. The need for local authority homes to be improved and repaired is taken into consideration when determining the size of this allocation. It is for the Manchester city council to decide how best to distribute these resources to meet the needs of the city.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a current estimate of the numbers of sheltered housing units which exist in England; how many more units will be built in the years 1993-94 to 1994-95; and if he will provide details of how many of these units will be provided by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report numbers of their annual housing investment programme (HIP1) returns of their own sheltered dwellings, and estimates of those owned by housing associations, by other public sector organisations and in the private sector.

The estimated total of such dwellings in England at 1 April 1992 appears in column A2a5 of "1992 HIP1—Regional Grossing", a copy of which is in the Library.

The Department has no information about future provision.

Urban Development Councils

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each urban development council the budget now to be provided for 1993-94, compared with the budget for 1992-93 and previously planned budget of 1993-94; and what changes have been made in the planned lifespan of any urban development council.

Mr. Robin Squire: The allocation of resources among urban development corporations has yet to be finalised. No changes have yet been made to the planned lifetimes of the corporations.

West Midlands (Grants)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which parts of Staffordshire currently fall within the west midlands intermediate area for assisted area status; how much grant was awarded to these areas for each of the last three years; how that money was spent; and how much assistance from EC funds was subsequently available.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Assisted area status applies to those parts of Staffordshire lying within the Birmingham, Walsall, Wolverhampton and Dudley travel-to-work areas.

RAS grant is awarded to support capital investment projects which create or safeguard jobs and grant offered to the above areas over the last three years was as follows:

1989-90	986,500
1990-91	991,500
1991-92	89,500
	totalling £2,067,500 in all.

None of these awards has been assisted from EC funds.

Superstore, Greenwich

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations will affect his decision to order a public inquiry into the planning applications for superstores at (a) Well Hall and (b) Shooters Hill in London SE9.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 20 November 1992]: The general approach to calling in applications is as stated in circular 2/81. Applications will in general be called in only if planning issues of more than local importance are involved. Such cases may include, for example, those which in our opinion could have wide effects beyond their immediate locality, which give rise to substantial regional or national controversy, which may conflict with national policy on important matters, and those where the interests of national security or of foreign Governments may be involved.

PSA Projects

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he can now give final details of the sums paid for the purchase of PSA Projects.

Mr. Redwood: Final details of the sums paid in respect of the purchase of PSA Projects will not be available for some considerable time as this will depend on the number of transferred staff remaining with the business for more than five years from the date of the sale.

When contracts were exchanged for the sale of PSA Projects to Tarmac, the negative consideration payable to Tarmac at completion was estimated at £49·75 million, subject to changes in the net liabilities to be transferred which should be finalised by October 1993. The most recent changes will mean that at completion Tarmac will receive the benefit of a cash subscription for shares in the privatised company of £44·4 million and a cash asset of £13·3 million for which Tarmac will pay the Government £2·8 million—a negative consideration of £54·9 million.

The net cash asset of £10·5 million relates to the excess of the estimated value of amounts owed by PSA Projects to sub-consultants and others for work done up to the point of sale over the estimated value of assets being transferred to Tarmac.

These assets exclude the estimated £40 million owed by customers to PSA Projects at the point of sale which will be collected by PSA and retained in Government. In addition to the net liabilities at the point of sale, the negative consideration reflects PSA Projects' requirements for financing working capital, investment in new systems, marketing and training and forecast losses on existing work pending PSA Projects restructuring itself to become fully competitive.

The negative consideration will be adjusted pound for pound upwards or downwards as appropriate, after preparation of a completion statement to compare actual net liabilities at the point of sale with the estimate of £10·5 million. It will be further increased by between £3·1 million and £6·3 million after one year depending on the number of ex-civil service staff still in the business. The sale agreement also provides for the completion statement to be reopened for up to two years after the sale in the event of late submission of sub-consultant bills for which accruals were not included in the completion statement as the income for any related work would have been retained within government.

The Secretary of State's liability for severance payments to PSA Projects staff now in the business, whether or not they transfer to Tarmac, is limited to £40·33 million. Of this, severance payments by the Government to staff not willing to transfer permanently with the privatised business are likely to fall in the range of £30 million to £35 million and therefore the balance of payments to Tarmac to reimburse severance payments for up to approximately 165 ex-civil servants who did transfer are expected to fall in the range £5 million to £10 million.

The Government have previously announced their commitment to guarantee the redundancy entitlements of transferring staff against the purchaser's bankruptcy for up to five years post-sale. The maximum value of this contingency liability is now estimated at £30 million. The departmental minute laid on 26 June 1992 indicated that the maximum contingent liability to be undertaken in the course of sale negotiations was estimated not to exceed £70 million.

The replacement pension scheme will be fully funded as at the point of sale. The value of the bulk transfer from the principal civil service pension scheme is not yet known, as it depends on the number of staff opting to transfer their pension rights to the new scheme. PSA will add 6 per cent. of the transfer value to the pension fund to take account of differences in the forecast average retirement age and commutation arrangements.

Community Care

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific resources have been made available to local authorities to assist them in meeting the special needs of the elderly and physically disabled people, drug and alcohol misusers, people with learning disabilities, and people with HIV or AIDS under the community care legislation which comes into force in April 1993.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

A special transitional grant of £539 million will be made available to local authorities in England next year for their new responsibilities for community care. This covers all relevant client groups, and will be additional to authorities' general funding through the revenue support grant and specific grants for mental illness, HIV/AIDS and alcohol and drugs misuse of £34·4 million, £12·4 million and £2·3 million respectively.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister if briefing material for the Ministry's folder for Question Time while he was (a) Chief Secretary to the Treasury, (b) Foreign Secretary, (c) Chancellor of the Exchequer and (d) Prime Minister still exists; and if he will make it available to the Scott committee of inquiry.

The Prime Minister: The briefing material prepared for my use at Question Time while I was Chief Secretary to the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer and since I have been Prime Minister is still in existence. Not all the briefing material prepared for me for Question Time while I was Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has been retained, although that which relates to Iraq still exists. Material which is asked for by Lord Justice Scott's inquiry will be made available to him.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister how the Iraqi defence procurement network's activities in relation to United Kingdom-based companies were monitored by the Government in the period (a) 1985 to December 1988 and (b) since December 1988.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 November 1992]: It is not the Government's practice to comment on intelligence matters.

Devaluation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of (a) the degree to which the sterling price of imports has been maintained and (b) the change in demand for imported manufactures, following the fall in the value of sterling.

The Prime Minister: It is not possible to separate the impact of the recent fall in the value of sterling from other factors influencing the sterling price of United Kingdom imports. Nevertheless, improved competitiveness is expected to restrain the growth of manufactured import volumes in 1993.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the benefits of devaluation to the financing needs of the coal industry.

The Prime Minister: The new external financing limits for British Coal announced last week, which are provisional pending decisions on the coal review, already take account of recent changes in exchange rates.

Pit Closures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what account he took in agreeing to the pit closures of the expenditure implications as regarding unemployment benefit; if he will publish a table showing for each mine in the current year and for each of the next five years (a) the estimated direct and indirect costs to the Exchequer of those made unemployed, (b) the estimated operational loss at each mine in 1991 and in the current year to date and (c) the estimated loss in 1993 of disposing of surplus production on the international market at the world price.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 October 1992]: I had regard to the likelihood that, in the light of market assessments, continuing to mine coal for which there was no economic market would involve a substantial ongoing cost to public expenditure and that we were proposing a wide range of measures to help those made redundant secure new jobs and to enhance job prospects in the areas affected. I have asked the chairman of British Coal to write to the hon. Member about the information at (b). On (c), this too would be an operational matter for British Coal but even in the event that a suitable contractual arrangement could be established on commercial grounds there would also be the matter of compliance with the United Kingdom's GATT and other international trade obligations.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Prime Minister how many public interest immunity certificates were signed by Ministers (a) from 1974 to 1979 and (b) since 1979.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Public interest immunity certificates were signed by Ministers periodically throughout the period in question, but no central record is held of the number involved.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Budget Figures

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish the figures for his budget for 1992-93 broken down by the arts, heritage, sport, film, broadcasting, tourism and departmental administration.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is as follows:

1992-93

	£ million
Museums and galleries	214
Performing arts	236
Libraries	141
The heritage	200
Sport	50
Film	22
Broadcasting	19
Tourism	46
Administration	10
Central Government total	938
Local authorities credit approvals for sport and recreation	30
Total departmental programme	968

However, provision for 1992-93 is subject to amendment by winter Supplementary Estimates and changes to cash limits. In particular, subject to parliamentary approval, a Supplementary Estimate of £42 million is being sought to provide funds for the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority, as well as an Estimate for an increase in administration costs. Assets accepted in lieu of tax will continue to be a claim on the Reserve.

Royal Parks

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish a list of all the new capital projects in the royal parks referred to in his Department's news release of 12 November, together with the estimated cost of each such project.

Mr. Key: Final decisions have not been taken yet on next year's programme of capital projects in the Royal parks, and design work is still in hand in some cases. However, I envisage that as a result of the additional allocation of funds announced on 12 November it will be possible to carry out the following projects:

map and signposting in all the parks;
restoration of Speakers corner, Hyde park;
floodlighting the lake in St. James's park;

subject to satisfactory design and acceptable costings.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage took over responsibility for a small number of regulations when it was formed after the last general election. Although the Department's responsibilities in this area are not extensive, officials are reviewing the modest scope for deregulation and simplification of regulation in consultation with the deregulation unit of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Key: I am the Minister responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of the Department of National Heritage.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April.

Mr. Key: None.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Guyana

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of assistance provided by the United Kingdom Government to Guyana; what additional assistance was already committed or programmed prior to the elections; and which additional types and levels of assistance Her Majesty's Government expect to offer as a consequence of Guyana achieving democratic status.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Between 1989-90 and 1991-92 we provided to the Government of Guyana £13·7 million in programme aid and a continuing programme of technical assistance running at approximately £1·5 million per year. For 1992-93 no new capital aid commitment was made because of delays in holding free and fair elections. The technical assistance programme continued, albeit at a slightly reduced level. We also contributed £60,000 to the Commonwealth Secretariat Guyana elections monitoring mission. We have started discussing future assistance with the new Guyana Government, but no decisions have yet been reached.

Iraq

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessments of humanitarian needs have been conducted for Iraq outside the safe haven and Kurdish areas of northern Iraq and of the numbers of people affected; what funding his Department will provide; and by what mechanisms aid will be delivered.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 November 1992]: In September of this year, the director of UNICEF and the under-secretary for the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs visited Iraq to assess needs in preparation for a United Nations plan of action covering the whole country, which was published in November. In view of the grave difficulties of access to many areas of southern Iraq, the United Nations has been unable to conduct a detailed needs survey in the south, or to provide detailed estimates of the numbers of people in need of assistance.

But the United Nations needs to further consider how to channel assistance to the more inaccessible areas, following their signature of a memorandum of understanding with the Government of Iraq. WHO and UNICEF have procured drugs and medical supplies for distribution in the south.

We maintain regular contacts with the non-governmental organisations, which are able to gain access to parts of the south. They report that conditions are grim, particularly in the marshes, mainly due to the actions of the Iraqi armed forces.

We continue to support the work of NGOs such as Iraqi civilian aid and the Amar appeal which provide valuable, though of necessity small scale, assistance to some of the most needy people in southern Iraq, and in the refugee camps of Iran. So far in 1992 we have provided nearly £2 million to such agencies, including a recent contribution of £255,000 to the Amar appeal for work in the marshes. We have agreed with Iraqi civilian aid that they will spend the final portion of their £625,000 grant to buy winter clothing for refugees. We are currently considering further medical aid through NGOs to the south. We stand ready to respond to further requests for assistance if conditions permit.

WALES

Phosphate Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sites of special scientific interest in Wales that have been damaged by phosphate pollution.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Three terrestial SSSIs in Wales have been subjected to phosphate pollution. These are Rhyd y Foel (Clwyd), Coedydd a Chorsydd Aber Teifi (Dyfed) and Gweunydd Ty-brith (Powys).

Road Safety

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources he has set aside for local safety schemes for trunk roads in Wales for 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend will shortly decide the allocation of resources for 1993-94.

Forestry

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities currently have structure plans including policies on afforestation; and how many such policies give guidance on the types of species to be planted.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Clwyd, Gwynedd, Mid Glamorgan and Powys have policies dealing with afforestation in their approved structure plans. All counties in Wales have policies relating to tree planting in forests and woodlands in their approved structure plans. None give guidance on the types of species to be planted.

Rural Parishes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many classified rural parishes there are in Wales; how many such parishes do not have (a) a permanent shop, (b) a post office, (c) a school, (d) a village hall and (e) a daily bus service; and if he will publish the equivalent figures for (i) 1961, (ii) 1971 and (iii) 1981.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of civil parishes in rural districts in Wales in 1961 and 1971 was 899. Rural districts and civil parishes were abolished in 1974. Information on amenities is not collected centrally.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils there are in each grant-maintained school in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

	Pupils on roll [1]September 1992
Cwmcarn grant-maintained school	330
Bishop Vaughan catholic comprehensive school	927
Brynmawr comprehensive school	477

[1] Provisional.

Fluoride

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those district health authorities that have requested Welsh Water plc to increase the fluoride content of water supplies, indicating (i) those that have had their request met, (ii) those whose applications are pending and (iii) those whose applications have been refused.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Gwynedd health authority have a long-standing agreement with Welsh Water dating from 1955 to fluoridate water supplies on Anglesey. They have requested Welsh Water plc to replace the equipment used to fluoridate the water supply on Anglesey which has not been in operation for about four years. The company has not yet acceded to that request. The Department is not aware of any other requests of Welsh Water plc by health authorities concerning fluoridation.

Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide specific funding for citizens advice bureaux in Wales to launch local publicity campaigns to enable the general public to know which general dental practitioners are taking on new national health service patients.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This action is not necessary nor would it be appropriate. The management of general dental services is the responsibility of family health services authorities which have up-to-date information on the services available in their areas. That information is readily available to members of the public and citizens advice bureaux. The decision on whether a publicity campaign is required rests with the authority in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidelines issued by health authorities and family health service authorities in Wales to ensure that the ratio of community dentists to salaried dentists is appropriate throughout Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for the district health authorities to determine the appropriate number of community dentists in the light of local needs. The number of salaried dentists employed by family health services authorities is dependent on local circumstances and endorsement by the Department in the light of the criteria laid down in WHC(92)55, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. Both authorities are expected to liaise with one another in considering appointments needs and circumstances.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it a requirement of family health service authorities in Wales to inform all national health service patients de-registered by a general dental practitioner of the locations and operating times of the community dental service.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This decision is one which should be taken by family health services authorities in the light of local needs and circumstances. Normally, authorities would direct "de-registered" patients to another general dental practitioner still accepting patients under the NHS. Only if this option is in some way unsuitable or impracticable would authorities direct patients to the community dental service in its "safety net" capacity. In those circumstances, authorities would supply patients with all relevant information.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will summarise the decision-making process which determines whether family health service authorities employ a salaried dentist or the area health authority employs a community dental officer.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for the family health services authority to decide whether to apply to the Department for permission to employ salaried dentists. Each application is considered in light of the criteria outlined in circular WHC(92)55. Briefly, these are that the numbers of independent practitioners are not sufficient to ensure adequate provision of general dental services and that the FHSA should give a clear indication of the geographical area where the deficiency exists, along with reasons why the deficiency cannot be met by other methods. Similarly, a district health authority is responsible for determining the number of community dental officers it employs. I expect the authorities to liaise with one another in considering appointments which should be made in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken to attract more dentists to the county of Gwynedd who are able to treat national health service patients.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the Gwynedd family health services authority. The authority has applied for permission to employ salaried dentists and my right hon. Friend has given permission for four whole-time equivalent salaried dentists to be employed. The authority has also attracted general dental practitioners to its area by utilising the Department's location incentive grants and by local initiatives.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dentists in Gwynedd currently provide services under the national health service.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As at 30 June 1992, the latest available date, there were 63 general dental practitioners in contract with Gwynedd family health services authority.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Gwynedd are unable to register with dental practices.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken to re-open the emergency dental treatment centre in Bangor, Gwynedd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is the responsibility of general dental practitioners to ensure that emergency treatment is available for those patients registered with them. Discussions are now taking place between the Gwynedd family health services authority and Gwynedd health authority with a view to providing a weekend emergency service in Bangor for those patients who are not registered with a general dental practitioner.

National Museum

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the director of the national museum of Wales to discuss the continuance of the museum's school lending service.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am aware of the Director's views on funding for the museum school service in Wales. In considering this matter in the public expenditure round, I am taking into account that five local education authorities already fund the service, and the possibility of continued support from these and other sources.

Bad Smells

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints have been made to environmental health officers in Wales concerning bad smells in each of the last 10 years; and what are the numbers of such complaints relating to (a) industrial processes and (b) agricultural practices.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office does not hold this information.

Pollution Monitoring

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to designate additional monitoring sites in (a) urban and (b) rural areas of Wales to assess levels of (i) sulphur dioxide and (ii) nitrogen oxides.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In line with the commitment in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200) the Government recently extended the United Kingdom's urban air monitoring network. Among new urban stations opened was one in Cardiff which became operational in May 1992. More stations are planned and will monitor sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxide as well as other pollutants.

There are no plans to extend rural monitoring from its present level which, on the basis of current expert advice, is considered adequate.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures for emissions of (a) sulphur dioxide, (b) black smoke, (c) nitrogen dioxide, (d) volatile organic compounds and (e) carbon monoxide in Wales, by sector and, where appropriate, by fuel type.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on these emissions, by sector and fuel type, is available for the United Kingdom as a whole only. The latest published data is in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics No. 14, copies of which are held in the Library of the House.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether Welsh local authorities will be allowed to use capital receipts from the sale of council houses for the purposes of new build.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We do not encourage authorities to undertake new build themselves when better value for money can be obtained by other means.

Pen y Gelli Quarry

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what costed proposals Clwyd county council have forwarded to his Department in relation to proposals to develop Pen y Gelli quarry, Lloc, near Holywell, as an itinerant transit camp; and what has been his response to date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Clwyd county council applied in September 1990 for approval in principle of grant aid for the establishment of this transit gipsy site. They were asked to reconsider the proposals and are currently doing so.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what commitments his Department has given with regard to the costs of the compulsory purchase order and the potential public inquiry with regard to the proposal to develop Pen y Gelli quarry, Lloc, near Holywell, as an itinerant transit camp; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No such order has yet been submitted to my right hon. Friend and no commitments have been given.

Pensioners (Transport)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales who (a) allow pensioners to travel free of charge on public transport in Wales, (b) allow pensioners to travel at discounted rates and (c) offer no concessions to pensioners travelling on public transport.

Sir Wyn Roberts: All local authorities in Wales operate concessionary fares schemes which give discount rates to pensioners. Those allowing free travel are Cardiff city council for persons over 75 years of age and Rhuddlan borough council which provides a free bus service for pensioners holding concessionary passes.

Sand Dredging

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the volume of sand dredged off the Welsh coast over each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the volume of sand dredged off the Welsh coast is not available. Figures on the amount of all sea-dredged aggregates entering Welsh ports are given in the table.

One-port traffic: sea-dredged aggregates entering Welsh ports[1]

	Thousand tonnes
1982	1,230
1983	1,504
1984	1,503
1985	1,412
1986	1,400
1987	2,305
1988	2,019
1989	2,450
1990	2,161
1991	1,687

Source: Department of Transport and British Ports Federation.

[1] One-port traffic comprises off-shore traffic, sea-dredged aggregates and materials shipped for dumping at sea. Sea-dredged aggregates comprise dredged sand, gravel etc. landed at a port for commercial purposes.

Road Repairs

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to meet local authorities in Wales to discuss the financing of repairs to Welsh bridges and minor roads.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have no plans to do so. Local authorities fund such projects from unhypothecated resources.

Welsh Language

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the results of the consultation on the role of the Welsh language development committee of the Welsh joint education committee.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Nearly 30 organisations and individuals responded to the consultation paper issued in August, representing a broad range of opinion. I will be announcing our conclusions very soon.

Energy Saving

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts are currently being undertaken by his Department to encourage applications for THERMIE programme money from companies involved in energy saving and renewable energy sources in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: For the past five years my energy efficiency office has held annual seminars on THERMIE which have attracted large audiences from all sectors of the economy. Prior to this year's seminar, held in July, they also wrote to all engaged in energy research in Wales promoting this programme in particular. After the event they followed up with a further letter to offer further assistance in particular cases if required.

Water Supplies

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which geographical areas of Wales are currently served by water supplies that have been fluoridated.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Parts of Mid Glamorgan, Powys and Anglesey are served by water supplies which have previously been fluoridated. However, none of these water supplies are currently fluoridated.

Child Protection Registers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children appeared on child protection registers in Wales in each year since 1981.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of children in Wales on child protection registers was not centrally collected prior to 1988. Information for the years from 1988 to 1991 is given in the following table:

Year ended 31 March	Number of children
1988	1,903
1989	2,062
1990	2,302
1991	2,460

Information on the registers is used by local authority social services departments to manage their child protection work. It is not intended specifically to establish the extent of child abuse and comparisons between years may be affected by changes in the administrative arrangements of local authorities.

Housing

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will appoint a representative from Welsh district councils to serve on the board of Tâi Cymru.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Appointments to the board of Housing for Wales are not made on a representational basis.

A55

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what improvements he intends to make to roads which feed onto the A55 in north Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Plans for improvements are set out in the 1992 supplement to "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s".

Police

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the organisations and individuals who have (a) responded to his invitation to be consulted or (b) submitted comments, suggestions or representations about the future structure and funding of police authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: These matters are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary. Future arrangements for the police, following local government reorganisation in Wales, were, however the subject of advice submitted to the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government by the Home Office and electoral issues sub-group. Copies of that advice are in the Library of the House.

Health Service Waiting Lists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what mechanism his Department uses to ensure that the 1992-93 waiting times initiative moneys allocation to area health authorities is not used for extra contractual referrals.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The allocation of waiting times initiative funds in Wales are based on application from district health authorities which specify the nature and amount of treatment to be purchased for their residents, and indicate the effect upon immediate hospital waiting times for those residents.

The exact way in which this is achieved is a matter for the authorities themselves. An evaluation of the expenditure is undertaken on behalf of the Department at the end of each year.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the planned allocation of funds by his Department for each health authority in Wales for the waiting times initiative for 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No decision has yet been taken on resources for waiting times initiatives in Wales in 1993-94.

Nature Reserves

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of public money was spent by the Countryside Council for Wales for the purchase of national nature reserves in 1991-92; and what is the expected spend for 1992-93.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Countryside Council for Wales expenditure on the purchase of national nature reserves was £631,562 in 1991-92 and is expected to be £201,000 in 1992-93.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of grant was made by the Countryside Council for Wales under section 38 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to voluntary conservation bodies for the purposes of land purchase in 1991-92; and what is the expected spend for 1992-93.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Section 38 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 was repealed on 1 April 1991. The Countryside Council for Wales operates its land purchase grant scheme under the provisions of section 134 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, and section 9 of the Local Government Act 1974, which enable the Countryside Council for Wales to provide grants to partners in the voluntary and public sectors to purchase land for nature and landscape conservation. The amount of grant for land purchase provided in 1991-92 to voluntary conservation bodies was £232,106. Grants totalling £333,325 have been offered for 1992-93.

Emergency Medical Treatment

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the Welsh health authorities the number of patients who received (a) emergency in-patient treatment and (b) any emergency treatment who resided outside the particular health authority area where they were treated in the quarters of 1990, 1991 and the first three quarters of 1992; and if he will divide up the figures by specialty.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 19 November 1992]: In the light of the size and number of tables of information which are available, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the information in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxes and Duties

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all indirect taxes and duties which have increased by more than the rate of inflation since 1978-79, giving for each (a) the rate in 1978-79 and 1992-93 and (b) the real increase since 1978-79.

Sir John Cope: The information is given in the table. The question is taken to refer to specific excise duties rather than ad valorem taxes and duties. Exceptionally the figures shown for cigarettes comprise both ad valorem and specific duty. Aviation gasoline was not subject to duty in 1978-79.

CFCs

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the use of fiscal incentives in connection with capital costs involved in the phasing out of chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The existing tax regime provides relief for capital investment on machinery and plant, including equipment used in the production of CFC-free products. By providing a broadly neutral tax system for businesses, with a common rate of capital allowances for investment in most equipment, we allow businesses to decide where investments should be made. The increase in first-year capital allowances from 25 per cent. to 40 per cent. which was announced in the autumn statement, will provide an additional incentive for investment by businesses in the year to October 1993.

Statistical Returns

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the range of penalties possible under section 4 of the Statistics of Trade Act 1947 for failure to make statistical returns; and in how many cases in the year 1991-92 action was taken on his behalf that could have led to such penalties being incurred.

Mr. Nelson: The maximum penalty under section 4 of the Statistics of Trade Act 1947 for failure to make statistical returns is a fine of a £1,000.

The number of cases taken on the Chancellor's behalf in the year 1991-92 that could have led to such penalties being incurred was 884. Of these, 877 responded to this action and only the remaining seven were prosecuted.

Taxation

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number and percentage of standard rate and higher rate taxpayers in (a) each county, (b) each region and (c) the United Kingdom for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates for 1989-90 are as shown in the table. Married couples are counted as one unit in this last year before independent taxation.

Duty Free Allowances

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the change in revenue which will result from the changes in duty free allowances from 1 January 1993.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 19 November 1992]: The completion of the single market on 1 January 1993 will not result in any change in duty free allowances for excise goods. The main change for travellers will be the abolition of duty paid allowances for intra-EC travellers. As shown on page 56 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1992-93 published in March 1992, we expect the increase in personal importation of drink and tobacco products will result in a revenue loss to the United Kingdom Exchequer of around £250 million.

As an unrelated issue, negotiations have been taking place for some time with our EC partners over an increase in the "other goods" allowance for non-excisable projects, currently set at 45 ECU (£32). An objective of our presidency has been to make progress in this area. A provisional agreement has now been reached increasing the allowance to 175 ECU (£139) for third country travellers and to 90 ECU (£71) for intra-EC travellers, subject to reserves by Germany and Denmark. These increases would cost the United Kingdom exchequer around £35 million in a full year.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to seek to remove from liability for VAT payments made for the private care of elderly persons.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 24 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to change United Kingdom VAT law relating to the domiciliary care of elderly people by private care agencies.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency, Yorkshire

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the full range of furniture and household goods which social fund officers in the York Benefits Agency office were being advised to treat as high-priority items in October in each year since 1988.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 24 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about priority levels for furniture and household goods in the Agency's York office.

Social Fund Officers (SFO) decide the overall priority of individual applications by looking at all the circumstances of the case. They are obliged to take account of guidance issued by the Secretary of State for Social Security, and by the District Manager acting as Area Social Fund Officer (ASFO).

Since 1988, guidance issued by the Secretary of State has indicated that only those items of furniture and household equipment that are essential to the applicant, should be afforded high priority. Over the same period the ASFO has also indicated that high priority should generally be afforded to essential items. However, I should point out that, since SFOs look at all the circumstances surrounding an application, what is an essential item for one applicant may not be for another.

Budgeting Loans are aimed at those on Income Support who find it difficult to budget for intermittent expenses, but Community Care Grants are targeted on specified circumstances. The Secretary of State guidance on the level of priority for grants is therefore in terms of the circumstances of the applicant, rather than the item requested. No advice is therefore provided on the level of priority accorded to grant applications for furniture and household equipment. This is for the SFO to decide.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the benefits agency district covering Kilmarnock and Loudoun qualify for payment under the cold weather scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. William McKelvey, dated 24 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many households in the Benefits Agency District covering Kilmarnock and Louden qualify for payment under the cold weather scheme.

Kilmarnock and Louden is covered by the Agency's Irvine and Kilmarnock District. It is not possible to give an exact figure of how many customers would qualify for a Cold Weather payment except at disproportionate cost. However, based on figures for those claiming Income Support in August 1992 it is estimated that approximately 11,000 customers in that District may qualify for a Cold Weather payment should the area be triggered. Parliamentary Constituencies and District boundaries do not correspond however and therefore a proportion of these may live outside the constituency.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cold weather payments were made in each region in each year since 1987.

Mr. Scott: All the information available on cold weather payments made since 1987 is held in the Library.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the annual costs in each year since 1988-89, along with estimates for 1992-93, of the national insurance rebates, tax refunds and other incentives paid in respect of personal pensions used for contracting out of SERPS.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 23 June, Official Report, columns. 138-39. Estimates for 1992-93 are in the table.

£ million

NI rebates	Incentives	Tax refunds	Total
1,950	650	225	2,825

Family Credit

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the proposed family credit ceilings in 1993-94 for (a) a married couple with one child aged under five years, (b) a married couple with two children aged under 11 years, (c) a married couple with two children aged over 11 years, (d) a married couple with three children aged under 11 years, (e) a married couple with three children aged over 11 years and (f) a married couple with two children aged under 11 years and two children over 11 years.

Mr. Burt: At the new benefit levels proposed for April 1993 the family credit ceilings represented by the highest amount of net earnings and other relevant income a family can have and still qualify for family credit at the minimum payment of 50p will be as follows:

Married couple with one child under 5 years	144·36
Married couple with two children under 11	159·71
Married couple with two children over 11 (but under 16)	180·00
Married couple with three children under 11	175·07
Married couple with three children over 11 (but under 16)	205·50
Married couple with two children under 11 and two children over 11 (but under 16)	210·71

Industrial Diseases

Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council report on bronchitis and emphysema in coal miners and metal production workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today laid the council's report before Parliament (Cm 2091). As with all IIAC reports, we will give it careful consideration. We will announce our decision about implementing the recommendations once the medical, administrative and financial issues raised by the report have been examined.

Pensioners Resident in Spain

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from groups representing British pensioners resident in Spain; what reply he has given; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received two representations concerning British pensioners resident in Spain, including the one from the right hon. Member for Wythenshawe dated 22 October. This was transferred to the Secretary of State for Health as the matters raised were mainly for her consideration.

EDUCATION

School Performance Tables

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to develop the comparative tables of school performance in future years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: Under the parents charter, the information about schools' performance made available to parents in comparative tables will build up systematically over the remainder of the decade.

Public examination results

The Department published this month the first comparative tables of GCSE and A/AS examination results in all maintained schools and those independent schools which volunteered to take part. From 1993, the published information will cover all secondary schools in England, including all independent ones. The Department will also be considering how to incorporate information about the vocational qualifications obtained in each school as increasing numbers of pupils try for these.

National curriculum test results

The Department will shortly publish the national results of the 1992 national curriculum tests of seven-year-olds in English, mathematics, science and technology and an analysis of the results in each LEA. The results in each LEA will be set alongside information about expenditure per nursery/primary pupil in the LEA so that judgments can be made about value for money at local level. Equivalent national and LEA analyses of the results of NC tests will be published every year after this as the assessment arrangements are extended to new subjects and key stages. The Department is also publishing this year a national analysis of the results of the 1992 pilot tests of 14-year-olds in mathematics and science in which 75 per cent. of secondary schools took part.

The Department published for consultation on 21 October proposals for the inclusion of information about the results of the tests of 7, 11 and 14-year-olds in the comparative tables of school performance. Under these proposals information will be published annually, school by school, about the proportion of pupils in each age group reaching or exceeding a target level. The information will cover every maintained school and those independent schools which participate in the tests.

This means that the publication of comparative information about NC test results will be introduced to the following schedule:

from 1993 and subsequently:
  the results of 7-year-olds in English, mathematics, science, technology, history and geography;
  the results of 14-year-olds in English, mathematics, science and technology.
from 1994 and subsequently:
  the results of 11-year-olds in English, mathematics, science and technology;
  the results of 14-year-olds in history and geography;
from 1995 and subsequently:
  the results of 11-year-olds in history and geography;
  the results of 14-year-olds in modern foreign languages.

The proposals do not envisage the publication of comparative information about results in music, art and PE because these subjects will not be assessed on the NC 10 level scale.

Comparative information about the enhancement of pupils' learning over time achieved by schools

The Department's October proposals also foreshadow the publication in comparative tables of a standard measure of the extent to which schools have enhanced pupils' attainments between one key stage of the National Curriculum and another—the "value-added". These measures will be phased in as and when pupils assessed at one age are assessed again at another. This implies the following timetable:

from 1995 and subsequently:
  the enhancement beween testing at seven (key stage 1) and at 11 (key stage 2);
  the enhancement between testing at 14 (key stage 3) and at 16 (key stage 3).
from 1997 and subsequently:
  the enhancement between testing at 11 (key stage 2) and 14 (key stage 3).
from 1999 and subsequently:
  the enhancement between testing at 11 (key stage 2) and 16 (key stage 4).

Attendance rates

From 1993, it is intended that the comparative tables will contain information about the annual unauthorised pupil absence, and the numbers of pupils involved, in all maintained and independent schools.

Pupils' routes to further and higher education, training and employment

From 1993, it is intended that the comparative tables will contain information about the routes taken by pupils at age 16. The information published will cover both maintained and independent schools.

Further information

In addition to the comparative tables, each maintained school is required to produce a prospectus each year. The school can include any information which it feels would be helpful, but must include:

full details of all public examinations taken by pupils, including vocational qualifications, broken down by subject and gender; rates of unauthorised absence for each term and each year group;

and, from 1993, we propose:

national curriculum test results;

routes taken by pupils once they reach school leaving age.

The prospectus must also summarise curriculum and examination policies and arrangements made for pupils with special educational needs. We propose to require in addition a statement about how the school promotes the moral, spiritual, social and cultural values of pupils.

From September 1993 full inspection reports on every maintained secondary school will be published every four years. Four-yearly inspections of other maintained schools will start in 1994. The inspections will be arranged by OFSTED (the Office for Standards of Education) and will report on the quality of education, standards achieved, efficiency of management and development of values in the school. All parents will be sent a summary of the report on their children's school. The full report on each school will be available at the school and in local libraries.

School Inspectors

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what criteria have been used for the selection of those being currently trained as registered secondary school inspectors;

(2) how many registered secondary school inspectors are to be appointed for the school year 1993-94;

(3) how many registered secondary school inspectors currently being trained and employed are currently (a) local educational advisers and (b) former local educational advisers.

Mr. Forth: The training and registration of inspectors under the Education (Schools) Act 1992, and the arrangements under which they will carry out inspections under section 9 of that Act, are all the responsibilities of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools.

Pupil Assessments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of the children who are tested at the key stage one national curriculum assessment are aged (a) seven and (b) six at the time of the test.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not held centrally. In 1992 teachers were able to administer the end of key stage 1 tests from the mid-point of the spring term until the mid-point of the summer one. Estimates based on quarterly birth rate statistics recorded by OPCS reveal that by the end of this testing period less than 25 per cent. of pupils tested would not have reached their seventh birthdays.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many hours of teacher time he expects to be allocated to the administration and management of key stage one tests in primary schools (a) currently and (b) when the full range of national curriculum subjects is tested.

Mr. Forth: The test of reading expected, teachers were able to administer the 1992 statutory tests for seven-year-olds in English, mathematics and science in 24 hours, on average, for each class. This was well within the maximum of 30 hours allowed for. In addition teachers took on average nine hours to test individual pupils' reading ability by hearing them read aloud. Teachers were able to choose to administer the tests at any time between the mid-point of the spring term and the mid-point of the summer term.

The 1993 tests in English, mathematics and science will be to the same model and should take the same time.

Assessments in the other foundation subjects will be based on teachers' own assessments of pupils' school work, although teachers will have available voluntary tests in technology, history and geography to use at their own discretion.

Free School Meals

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils received free school meals in Blyth Valley and Northumberland at (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for each year since 1988.

Mr. Forth: Information for schools in Blyth valley is not available centrally. The numbers of children taking free school meals in maintained primary and secondary schools in Northumberland local education authority for each year from 1988 to 1992 (provisional) are given in the table.

Pupils taking free school meals

Northumberland LEA	[1]Primary	Secondary	Total
[2]1992	3,210	2,403	5,613
1991	2,814	2,162	4,976
1990	2,563	2,017	4,580
1989	2,512	2,036	4,548
1988	2,181	1,991	4,172

[1] Primary figures 1989 to 1992 include pupils in nursery schools. Primary figures in relation to 1988 do not include such pupils.

[2] Provisional.

Education Associations

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the number of different schools he expects to be conducted by a single education association constituted under section 194 of the Education Bill.

Mr. Forth: The number will vary according to factors such as the timing of the identification of failing schools and their location. The Education Bill sets no upper limit.

"15000 Hours"

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what public funding was used for Professor Sir Michael Rutter's study "15000 Hours" into successful schools; and if he will list the names of the schools in the study.

Mr. Forth: The report on this project was published in 1979. The Department made grants of £71,045 to support the work which was also supported by the former Inner London education authority. The identities of the schools involved in the study were not made known to the Department.

Parents Meetings

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of annual parents' meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Annual parents' meetings are an important aspect of involving parents in the life of their children's schools. Research commissioned by the Department has added weight to anecdotal evidence that, in general, parental attendance is disappointing, whilst also finding instances of very successful meetings. We are considering how this might be followed up.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much funding has been allocated or spent to deal specifically with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Forth: A total of £4,911 has been spent in the current financial year to replace halon fire extinguishers with environmentally friendly alternatives.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by his Department.

Mr. Forth: Property Holdings, or their appointed contractors, maintain all the Department's refrigeration and air-conditioning plant, under their standard option arrangements. The Department depends on these arrangements to control the use of ozone-destroying chemicals, and to introduce suitable alternative or substitute materials in our premises.

In addition, for more general applications like the use of cleaning materials etc, the Department adheres to guidance and advice disseminated by the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within departmental buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Mr. Forth: There are 45 portable halon fire extinguishers contained within the Department. All these extinguishers will be replaced by the end of 1992 and be properly recycled.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within departmental buildings.

Mr. Forth: A replacement programme for Halon fire extinguishers will be completed by the target date of December 1992. All other ozone-depleting chemicals which have to be replaced are properly recycled under the terms of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within Department buildings in the last five years.

Mr. Forth: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what proportion of his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances becomes controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(2) what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by his Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use;

(3) what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere.

Mr. Forth: The disposal of controlled waste is governed by the Duty of Care Regulations which came into force on 1 April 1992 under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. These regulations make producers of controlled waste responsible for ensuring that it is disposed of safely and legally. There is no Crown immunity from these regulations and the Department takes care to observe them.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in his Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems.

Mr. Forth: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals;

(2) which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Mr. Forth: Both the Montreal protocol and EC regulations seek to control the production but not the use of substances which deplete the ozone layer. However, the Department is helping to phase out ozone-depleting substances by refraining from purchasing or using them unless no suitable alternative is available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in his Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally. Property Holdings, or its appointed contractors, maintain all the Department's refrigeration and air-conditioning systems and keep associated service records, under its standard option arrangements.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many CFC and HCFC installations are contained within departmental buildings; and how many CFC domestic fridges are contained within departmental buildings.

Mr. Forth: Property Holdings is responsible for the maintenance of the air-conditioning and refrigeration plant in all the Department's buildings. Technical information on these installations is not held by the Department.

The Department has 57 CFC domestic fridges.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what quantity of HCFC 22 is purchased by his Department per annum.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not make any direct purchases of HCFC22. Property Holdings, or its appointed contractors, is responsible for making purchases of such material for the Department under its Standard Option arrangements.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how the departmental green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds.

Mr. Forth: The Department's policy is not to purchase new materials which are known to be harmful to the ozone layer as set out in the Montreal protocol and its revisions. Where existing equipment containing substances harmful to the ozone layer is to be renewed or subject to major maintenance it will be replaced by materials which are understood to be ozone friendly wherever this is possible.

No specific measures have been considered and rejected.

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list teachers' salaries as a percentage of average non-manual earnings for each year since 1974.

Mr. Forth: The figures are given in the table:

Further Education

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students in further and higher education there were in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) the last year for which figures are available; and what was the average amount of money spent by the Government per student in each of those years.

Mr. Forman: Data are shown in the table for financial years 1979-80, 1985-86 and 1989-90, the latest year for which data are available. Further details are available from table 8 of Statistical Bulletin 10/92, a copy of which is in the Library.

[2] Rounded to nearest £5.

[3] Includes funding for research.

[4] Figures reflect the transfer of a number of institutions formerly maintained or assisted by local education authorities to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (PCFC) in April 1989.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the level of expenditure in 1992-93 on tertiary and further education and those related services to be transferred from local authority responsibility in 1993 by each local authority; and what reduction in standard spending assessment for each local authority will occur in 1993-94 as a result of this transfer of responsibility.

Mr. Forth: This information is not currently available. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be announcing shortly his proposals for the 1993-94 local government settlement, including proposals for standard spending assessments. He also intends to announce proposals to specify a relevant notional amount for each authority to be used as the basis of comparison for the exercise of his capping powers for 1993-94 reflecting, inter alia, his estimate of authorities' budgeted expenditure in 1992-93 on those functions which will become the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council from 1 April 1993.

Examination League Tables

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what amounts were paid to (a) Bath university and (b) PMS Communications Ltd. for compiling the recently published schools examination league tables.

Mr. Forth: The value of the contracts for the compilation of the school performance tables was as follows: (a) Bath university, £90,046; (b) PMS Communications Ltd., £65,000. These sums are exclusive of VAT.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when the contract to compile the schools examination league tables was advertised; how many organisations submitted tenders to carry out the work; which body carried out the tender evaluation; who drew up the tender specifications; and who was responsible for the award of the contract.

Mr. Forth: The procedures adopted in inviting tenders for this work and deciding on the award of contract were fully in line with established Government purchasing policy. It is not the Department's policy to advertise all contracts. In the case of the school examination results data preparation contract the Department was aware, through extensive supplier research, of 18 potential tenderers with the right level of expertise to undertake the work. This was felt to be a sufficient number to ensure a high level of competition and good value for money, without the need to advertise.

The tender specifications were drawn up by officials from a number of branches within the Department, who offered professional guidance on specific issues. Eighteen invitations were sent out, and five tenders were received for the work. These were evaluated by a project board comprising Departmental officials, also from a number of branches. The decision to award the contract to PMS Communications Ltd. was taken by the project board.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he is considering against Bath university and/or PMS Communications Ltd. under their contract for the compiling of the schools examination league tables in relation to inaccuracies in the work carried out.

Mr. Forth: All alleged inaccuracies in the examinations data for individual schools are being investigated individually. Where definite inaccuracies are proved to be the fault of the contractors, these will be rectified free of charge, in accordance with their contractual obligations. As at 24 November, this has happened in five cases only. About half the alleged inaccuracies have been supplied or agreed by schools themselves; the others relate to cases where the amendments sought were invalid, unsubstantiated or arrived after the given deadline.

"Choice and Diversity"

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library a list of the respondents to the White Paper "Choice and Diversity".

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has today placed in the Library a list of respondents to the White Paper "Choice and Diversity: A New Framework for Schools", and to the two related consultation documents on special educational needs and religious education.

As well as those included on the list, a further 750 responses were received from governing bodies, headteachers, teachers, parents and members of the public. It would not be appropriate to list such respondents, some of whom may not wish their names to be disclosed.

Delinquency

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current per capita spending on children in special schools for delinquents in London; and if he will outline the measures taken to reduce delinquency and its consequences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

There is one young offender institution in the London area, at Feltham, Middlesex. The per capita cost of running that establishment was £456 per week in the 1991-92 financial year.

Measures taken with juvenile offenders at Feltham YOI to help them to avoid further offending include group work on drug and alcohol abuse, temper control and sexual behaviour and relationships. In addition, members of a local victim support scheme come in to discuss the effects of offending on its victims, and members of inmates' families are invited in once a month to engage in discussion groups which deal with offending among other issues.

DEFENCE

Contractors

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the top 100 contractors to his Department in terms of size of the total contracts.

Mr. Aitken: The information for 1990-91, which is the latest available, is published at table 1.17 of the 1992 edition of "Defence Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the future sales potential of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: We expect that the EFA project will result in an even more exportable aircraft than Tornado which has created tens of thousands of jobs in the United Kingdom.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the capacity of the United Kingdom defence industry to construct the European fighter aircraft on its own.

Mr. Aitken: We are confident that our requirement for a new fighter aircraft can continue to be met through collaboration with our European allies. In the now unlikely event that this is not possible it would be technically feasible to complete the project on our own, although the cost implications would need careful consideration.

Export Controls

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution Ministers or officials of his Department will make to the forthcoming seminar held by the Export Control Organisation on a practical guide to United Kingdom export controls.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's officials regularly attend such seminars to provide guidance to industry on the export of defence and defence-related equipment. They participated in the seminar held on 20 November for this purpose.

Unexploded Bombs

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of the past five years and for each maritime county in England, Scotland and Wales the number of unexploded bombs and shells that have been rendered safe by units within his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Fylingdales

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the capital cost of the new installation at Fylingdales moor and (b) the annual running cost.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total capital cost of the modernised ballistic missile early warning system at RAF Fylingdales was £160 million. It is estimated that the annual running cost will be around £15 million.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will support the transfer of responsibility for inspections under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty from the International Atomic Energy Agency to a United Nations special commission under the direction of the Security Council.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The Government believe that the IAEA continues to be the appropriate agency to verify that states meet their commitments for the safeguarding of nuclear materials under the NPT and similar treaties.

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has made to the United Nations Security Council concerning improved intelligence-gathering procedures in world-wide nuclear proliferation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has made no representations to the United Nations Security Council on this issue.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has made to the Government of North Korea regarding obligations under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no personal contacts with representatives of North Korea. The United Kingdom continues to stress in international forums the importance we attach to North Korea abiding by her obligations under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. We also did so in talks with North Korean officials in June.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make representations to the United Nations Security Council to ensure that the non-proliferation regime is based on the possession of nuclear explosive materials as distinct from completed nuclear devices.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

There is no need for such a step. The treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons represents the cornerstone of the non-proliferation regime and the obligations it places on states parties cover both nuclear devices and nuclear materials.

EMPLOYMENT

Disability Quotas

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps she is taking to encourage employers to meet the disability quotas of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944;

(2) if she will list the criteria to be met by an employer before a permit to engage people not registered disabled can be issued; and in what circumstances such a permit can be renewed;

(3) how many permits to engage people not registered disabled are issued by her Department each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Eric Illsley, dated 25 November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the steps being taken to encourage employers to meet the disability quota of the Disabled Persons Employment Act 1944 and two Parliamentary Questions about permits. These are matters which fall within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

We put a considerable amount of resource into persuading employers to recruit and retain suitable registered disabled people that is people who count towards the 3% quota under the Disabled Persons Employment Act.

My Disability Advisory Service (DAS) and the Disablement Resettlement Officers (DROs) have been brought together to form Placing Assessment and Advisory and Advisory Teams (PACTS). These teams provide a professional integrated and trained network of help and advice for both employers and people with disabilities.

There are seventy one Placing Assessment and Counselling Teams (PACTs) nationwide. An important part of their duties is to encourage employers to try to recruit registered disabled people thus helping employers towards meeting the 3% Quota. PACTs can offer employers practical assistance towards helping employers recruit registered disabled people through our Special Schemes. Two schemes give specific help to employers through:

(i) grants of up to £6,000 to enable employers to adapt their premises or equipment to employ a person with a disability;

(ii) a Job Introduction Scheme providing a grant towards a person's wage for a trial period of usually six weeks.

Other Special Schemes provide particular help for the individual through:

(i) assistance with fares to work for people with disabilities who are unable to use public transport;
(ii) special tools and equipment that a person needs to do their job;
(iii) financial aid for certain visually handicapped people towards the cost of setting up a business.

We also produce the Code of Good Practice for employers which is available from the PACT. This is a reference document which gives guidance about recruiting and retaining people with disabilities.

Our Disability Symbol was launched in September 1990. It helps employers who are committed to good practice in employing people with disabilities to communicate that fact to potential job applicants. The Symbol is being strengthened both by the addition of a strap line "Positive about Disabled People" and from the 1 June 1993 requiring employers who use the symbol to make five specific commitments to action.

There is a press advertising campaign under way aimed at raising employers interest in employing people with disabilities. The campaign aims to encourage employers to adopt good policies and practices in the recruitment, training, career development and retention of people with disabilities and to generate more vacancies for people with disabilities. The campaign is backed up both by advice and information including a new booklet "Employing People with Disabilities".

I enclose copies of both the Code of Good Practice and Employing People with Disabilities for your information.

I now turn to your questions about the criteria for issuing a permit and the numbers of permits issued each year.

There are two types of permit. The basic test applied for both is whether suitable registered disabled people are available. An individual or immediate permit authorises the engagement of one or more people who are not registered disabled, to fill actual vacancies when no suitable registered disabled people are available. Bulk permits give the employer authority in advance to engage a specified number of people who are not registered as disabled (usually based on the employer's estimate of their likely vacancies), in particular occupations for a specific period of time. Bulk permits are issued on the understanding that, the employer will notify vacancies to the Jobcentre and will sympathetically consider the engagement of any suitable registered disabled people who may become available. These conditions apply whether an employer is applying for a first or a subsequent permit.

We do not keep centralised records of the numbers of permits that are issued and I am unable to say how many permits are issued each year. However I hope it will be helpful if I give the total number of employers issued with permits during each of the last five years for which data is available. The figures relate to a twelve month period ending 1 June each year.

Employers issued with permits in twelve month period ending 1 June

	Number
1987	18,577
1988	18,594
1989	18,530
1990	18,038
1991	17,649

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive Replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will list the local authorities to which permits to engage people not registered disabled have been issued this year;

(2) for how long permits to engage people not registered disabled have been issued to Barnsley metropolitan borough council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It has been the policy of successive Governments to treat as confidential, information about the issue of permits in accordance with the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 to individual employers, and not to disclose such information without their agreement.

Ingol Rehabilitation Centre

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received regarding the proposed closure of Ingol rehabilitation centre; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department has recieved representations from some hon. Members and from Lancashire county council. Preston borough council and one or two groups representing people with disabilities suggesting that the proposed closure of Ingol rehabilitation centre be reconsidered.

I believe that the major changes we are making in employment rehabilitation, of which the proposed closure is part, will lead to a better service for people with disabilities. Those changes involve replacing most of the Employment Service's network of centres with a network of local rehabilitation agents which has wider geographical coverage and which harnesses sources of commitment and expertise in the community. Adequate alternative provision, including residential provision, is now available, through agents, for clients of Ingol rehabilitation centre, and we are therefore satisfied that the closure should proceed.

Wages Councils

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many checks were carried out by the wages inspectorate which found workers underpaid in each region for each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 22 May 1992 to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden), Official Report, columns 339–46, tables 7 and 8.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many establishments in each region since 1979 have been (a) found failing to post wages council notices, (b) found failing to keep adequate records of wages paid, (c) found failing to keep adequate records of hours worked and (d) the subject of criminal prosecutions against employers under the Wages Act 1986.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is shown in the tables. In most cases the information is divided into two tables of changes in divisional boundaries in 1986.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 17 November, Official Report, column 155, on work-related training programmes, if she will give figures for every year since 1985.

Gas Regulations

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she expects to start the process of consulting publicly about the new edition of the Gas Installation and Use Regulations; how long she expects the process to take; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is expected that the Health and Safety Commission will publish a consultative document about the revision of the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1984 in spring 1993 and that the consultative document will allow for a three-month consultation period.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when copies of the discussion document on the reorganisation of Scottish local government were sent to (a) the Scottish press and (b) Scottish hon. Members, giving the exact time and date of dispatch in each case.

Mr. Stewart: Copies of the consultation paper on the structure of local government in Scotland were sent out by first class post to all right hon. and hon. Members representing Scottish constituencies on Monday 12 October, the date on which the paper was published. Copies were made available on arrival to members of the press who attended the public launch of the paper at 3 pm that day.

Disused Quarries

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the dangers at open disused quarries, particularly those which are filled with water; what further representations he has received regarding the incident at Bellrock quarry, resulting in the deaths of two schoolchildren; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Apart from the hon. Member's own representations in September, only one other letter has been received about the Bellrock quarry incident. There have been no representations about the dangers generally of open, disused quarries. As my letter of 21 October to the hon. Member confirmed, local authorities in Scotland already have sufficient powers under the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897. Indeed, I understand that Kyle and Carrick district council has now erected fencing around the quarry.

Police (Ethnic Minorities)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the police are from ethnic minorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As at 31 December 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, 0·2 per cent. of police officers in Scotland were from ethnic minorities.

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who in his Department has been appointed to oversee and develop green issues; how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in his Department.

Sir Hector Monro: As the green Minister at the Scottish Office I have overall responsibility for the environmental aspects of policies and programmes and for progressing initiatives which relate to the Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm. 1200). I am assisted by a Division within The Scottish Office Environment Department which has a general co-ordinating role on environmental issues. However, because of the diverse nature of the work of The Scottish Office, all its officials contribute either directly or indirectly to the environmental aspects of its responsibilities. Full details of the financial provision for environmental programmes are contained in the departmental report published each year.

Appointments

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he collates centrally on the political affiliations of appointees to public bodies and quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: None.

Renfrew (Development)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to promote the strategic economic development of Renfrew district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Government's principal agents for the promotion of local economic development are the local enterprise companies. Their business plans, completed each year and covering a three-year rolling period, set out their strategic and operational aims and objectives for their area.

The local enterprise company responsible for Renfrew district, Renfrewshire Enterprise, is involved in a range of initiatives and activities—often with other public and private sector bodies—to promote the development of skills, employment and economic prosperity in the area. The Glasgow airport initiative, which has very substantial potential employment and economic benefits for the area, is one example of the enterprise company working with others in a co-ordinated, complementary and strategic way to the benefit of the local community. I am sure the local enterprise company would be happy to discuss with the hon. Member the other aims and activities for the area set out in its business plan.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to give enterprise zone status to any part of Renfrew district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. The district does, however, have the advantage of development area status; and, of course, the full range of powers and functions available to the local enterprise company, Renfrewshire Enterprise, are deployed to the benefit of the district.

School Meals

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the results of the annual census of school meals in Scotland held in January 1992; and what changes these show compared with the corresponding 1991 results.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table. The number of pupils taking school meals has continued to increase, despite a fall in the number of pupils present on census day. Almost half the pupils present on census day took school meals with a further estimated 19 per cent. bringing their own food to school. Free meals formed 32 per cent. of the total meals provided. Cafeteria style meals remain more popular than two-course fixed meals.

[1] Excluding Grampian region, for which results for 1991 are not available.

NB:

A number of pupils took neither school meals nor brought food to school. These pupils would generally either have gone home for lunch or have eaten out locally.

A detailed statement of the returns from education authorities from which these national figures are derived is being placed in the Library.

The following table shows, as a percentage of pupils attending their respective sectors, those primary and secondary pupils taking meals or bringing their own food.

	Primary[1]		Secondary[2]

Pupils bringing own food[3]	27·6	25·0	6·8	6·5

[2] Includes 17 special departments in 1992 and 10 special departments in 1991 where special data have been included in secondary school figures.

[3] Excluding Grampian for which 1991 comparisons were not available.

Almost 70 per cent. of meals served are cafeteria style:

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what is his policy on contacts between officials of his Department and private sector firms and other bodies about water and sewerage services in Scotland before a decision on the future of these services is announced.

Mr. Lang: The day-to-day work of my Department necessarily involves contact with a wide range of private sector firms and other bodies about aspects of water and sewerage provision. These contacts will continue. The future structure of the services is discussed in the consultation paper I issued on 17 November. The preparation of this document has required contact with a number of bodies and, now that it has been issued, consideration of the options it sets out will involve discussions and exchanges of views with a variety of interested parties, whether at the initiative of the Department or of those parties themselves. These contacts are likely to take a variety of forms. A list of those responding to the consultation paper will be available in due course in the usual way.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make his policy to publish the waiting times at Aberdeen Royal Hospitals NHS trust for (a) removal of gall bladder, (b) removal of bunions, (c) trigger finger, (d) varicose veins, (e) hip joint replacement, (f) knee joint replacement, (g) trapped nerve in hand or foot, (h) haemorrhoidectomy, (i) peptic, gastric or duodenal ulcers, (j) cataract removal and (k) hernias;

(2) if he will make it his policy to publish the waiting times at Woodend hospital, Aberdeen for (a) removal of gall bladder, (b) removal of bunions, (c) trigger finger, (d) varicose veins, (e) hip joint replacement, (f) knee joint replacement, (g) trapped nerve in hand or foot, (h) haemorrhoidectomy, (i) peptic, gastric or duodenal ulcers, (j) cataract removal and (k) hernias.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 October 1992]: It is our intention to publish waiting times for these, and other hospitals in Scotland, for (e) hip joint replacement, (f) knee joint replacement and (j) cataract removal. These, and geriatric assessment, are the procedures for which all health boards in Scotland have set maximum waiting time guarantees for their residents in pursuance of the commitment given in the patients charter.

Postgraduate Awards

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many postgraduate students received an award from the Scottish Education Department for the academic year 1992-93.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 November 1992]: In session 1992-93 to date, the Scottish Office Education Department has offered awards to 3,385 postgraduate students under the postgraduate students' allowances scheme and to 158 students under the Scottish studentship scheme, which caters for postgraduate higher degree study.

Offshore Hydrocarbons Unit

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had about the future ownership of the offshore hydrocarbons unit and the British geological survey core store and the implications for employment in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions.

Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland from what previous figure the formula for setting Scottish expenditure relative to provision in England has been raised to 10·66 per cent.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 November 1992]: The figure, previous to 10·66 per cent. by which changes to the Scottish block were determined in relation to English provision was 11·76 per cent.

Patients (Mileage Rates)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the current mileage rate paid to patients travelling by car by each health board in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The existing guidance explains that, in general, travel expenses should be restricted to the cost of travelling by the cheapest form of public transport available. In certain circumstances, health boards may reimburse patients travelling by private car on the basis of the lesser of the estimated cost of petrol actually used or the equivalent public transport cost. Information is not collected on mileage rates but a survey undertaken in 1991 showed that some Boards had not been adhering to the guidance given but had been using a standard mileage rate varying from 5p to 8p per mile. Boards were reminded again in June 1992 of the guidance on the calculation of costs.

Tendering

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the criteria laid down for the acceptance of bids from organisations tendering as part of compulsory competitive tendering and in particular the grounds on which a local authority can select a bid other than the lowest.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 November 1992]: It is for local authorities in the first instance to decide on the award of a contract. In doing so, they must have regard to the compulsory competitive tendering provisions of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988, and particularly to the requirement not to act in a manner having the effect or intended or likely to have the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition. The Scottish Office Environment Department issued guidance to local authorities in March 1991 (Scottish Office Environment Department Circular 6/1991) on what does or does not constitute anti-competitive practice, and guidance regarding the non-acceptance of the lowest bid. That guidance will be superseded by new guidance and regulations, the terms of which have recently been the subject of consultation.

Nursing

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the quality and the objectivity of the civil service nursing advice provided in respect of (a) the national nursing audit development project and (b) the recently funded £120,000 nursing diagnosis/nomenclature project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 November 1992]: These projects seek to improve the information available about nursing treatments and to improve patient care by helping nurses to develop ways of critically reviewing their work. The relevant funding decisions were taken with the benefit of a range of advice from both within and outside the civil service.

EC Aid

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions he has sought aid for (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde in each of the past nine years under the terms of article 92(3) (a) of the treaty of Rome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Article 92(3)(a) of the treaty of Rome sets out one of the grounds on which state aid may be considered to be compatible with the Common Market. It does not provide a means of seeking EC assistance, and the question of seeking aid under its terms does not therefore arise.

GP Vacancies

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average number of applicants for vacancies for general practitioner posts in Scotland every year since 1989.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 November 1992]: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading referred the supply of contact lens cleaning solutions to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on [illegible]0 April 1992. The Commission was asked to report by the end of February 1993.

Computer Games

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer computer games manufacturers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Investigation of anti-competitive practices or monopolistic behaviour is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading. The director general makes references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission where he considers it appropriate.

Directors' Emoluments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to examine a sample of company accounts for compliance with the Companies Acts requirements for disclosures on directors' emoluments.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 439, what action he has taken against Ernst and Young for the audit failures identified by the inspectors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Copies of the reports have been forwarded to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will seek to amend the Register of Auditors and Information about Audit Firms Regulation 1991 to require the recognised supervisory bodies to record criticisms by the DTI inspectors against the relevant firm's name.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The amounts paid are as follows:

	Total £	Fees £	Disbursements £

Total cost of inspection to end October 1992	1,793,000	1,470,000	293,000

All figures include VAT. The fees paid to Mr. Watt include charges for support services provided by KPMG Peat Marwick.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 3 November, Official Report, column 139, if he will provide the names of the three companies whose accounts he has referred to the financial reporting review panel; and what has been the outcome of such referral.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. In the interest of fairness the panel does not disclose the names of the companies it inquires into while the inquiries are in train and it normally announces its findings only when it has reached an adverse conclusion. I understand that in one of the three cases the panel concluded that no action was called for and the other two are under consideration. A copy of the procedures of the panel was placed in the Library of the House in June 1991.

Auditing Standards

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to appoint an inquiry into the setting of auditing standards in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such plans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for legislation under which company auditors would owe a duty of care to creditors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such proposals.

Post Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the present methods of financing capital expenditure employed by the Post Office and its subsidiaries; and what changes are proposed following the autumn statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Post Office and its subsidiaries finance capital expenditure from internally generated funds. No changes are proposed following the autumn statement.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the capital expenditure of the Post Office and each of its subsidiaries for each of the last five years; and what are the projections for the current year.

Mr. Leigh: Capital expenditure of the Post Office group and its principal constituent businesses for each of the last five years, as stated in the annual accounts, was as follows:

£ million

2. Girobank sold in July 1990.

Projected capital expenditure of the Post Office Group for 1992-93 is £344 million in total the breakdown between the principal constituent businesses remains commercially confidential.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he was first informed of the costs of the liquidation of BCCI.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My officials have been made aware at various times since the winding-up order on 14 January 1992 of some of the detailed aspects of the cost of the liquidation of BCCI. Detailed figures given to the House by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 6 November 1992, Official Report, column 593, were supplied to my officials by the Touche Ross liquidators on 5 November 1992.

Defence Industries

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives have been taken by the Government since 1990 to encourage the arms and defence industries in the north west region to diversify into other areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: Diversification is essentially a matter for the commercial judgment of the companies concerned. My Department helps them with its wide range of programmes, including those in the enterprise initiative and "Managing into the 90s". A special seminar was held in Blackburn on 12 May 1992. The north west is benefiting from four projects under the European Community's PERIFRA scheme.

Coal Industry

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement concerning his discussions with British Coal and the power generators on the provision of British Coal mined coal for the generating market prior to the announced closure of 31 coal mines.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made clear to the House on 19 October, Official Report, columns 205-7, he was advised by British Coal before the closures were announced of the need to end production at the pits concerned in order to bring supply in line with demand.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement concerning the recent planning application by British Coal to demolish certain buildings at Easington colliery while this colliery is in the review procedure.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that British Coal made an application on 15 October to demolish certain buildings at Easington colliery; and that following my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade's announcement on 19 October of a moratorium in respect of 21 pits, which include Easington, British Coal has suspended further action in respect of this application.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the mining consultants Boyd's was requested to assess the viability of the 10 collieries currently in the review process and due to close in January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Last year John T. Boyd Company was asked to assess the viability of 28 collieries, chosen by British Coal on a representative basis. Of the collieries studied, five are among the 10 collieries which have subsequently become subject to statutory consultation. The five pits are Betws, Parkside, Trentham, Grimethorpe and Houghton Main.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount of opencast coal produced in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The immediate and overriding issue concerning EC regional policy is the size of the budget for the cohesion and structural funds for the period from January 1994. The United Kingdom Presidency hopes that agreement on this and the other aspects of the future financing of the Community from 1993 will be agreed at the Edinburgh European Council on 11-12 December.

Steel

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total production of liquid steel in Great Britain in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 November 1992]: Steel production is usually measured in terms of "crude steel production". This measure the crude output that can go forward for further processing, and is typically 1-2 per cent. less than the initial output of liquid steel. Information about crude steel production is regularly published by the Iron and Steel Statistics Bureau in "Iron and Steel Industry Annual Statistics", which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total quantity of steel imports for (a) the part-year from 1 January 1992 to the most recent record available, (b) the equivalent part-year period for 1991, 1990 and 1985 and (c) the percentage change year on year.

Engineering

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he intends to introduce to strengthen the United Kingdom's engineering industry.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 24 November 1992]: I refer the hon. member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of trade gave the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey), on 16 November 1992, Official Report, columns 71-72, which described Government action to help manufacturing. Engineering represents a very large proportion of our manufacturing GDP and I hope it will benefit in full measure from the policies my right hon. Friend set out in that reply.

Oil and Gas Reserves

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the proportion of the United Kingdom oil and gas reserves which have so far been taken from offshore fields.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Section 2.4 and table 7 of the Brown Book (Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom) published in April 1992 set out my Department's latest estimate, at 31 December 1991, of total potential recoverable reserves of oil and gas in the United Kingdom. These showed that remaining reserves could be up to 3·9 times as much as cumulative production to the same date in the case of oil and up to 4·2 times as much in the case of gas.

Nuclear Programmes

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what specifically-allocated financial contributions have been made in 1991-92 to 1992-93 by Nuclear Electric, Scottish Nuclear and British Nuclear Fuels plc to the Atomic Energy Authority fusion programme.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 November 1992]: None.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects a commercial prototype fusion reactor to enter service in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on its current development progress.

Mr. Eggar: [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Nuclear fusion is not expected to provide the basis for a commercially viable source of energy at least until the middle of the next century. There are no current plans for the development of a commercial prototype fusion reactor in the United Kingdom.

Photovoltaics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current programme of assessment studies into photovoltaics being undertaken by his Department; what is the cost of the programme; and if he will list the location of the studies.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: There are three assessment studies currently ongoing:

1. "A feasibility and design study for a photovoltaic building demonstration" by the university of Cardiff (at Cardiff).
2. "Grid connection of photovoltaic systems" by Halcrow Gilbert Associates (at Swindon).
3. "Photovoltaic modules as a cladding for commercial building" by British Petroleum (at Leatherhead).

The total cost of these studies is £232,000.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to launch a programme of demonstration projects into photovoltaics.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: I have no plans to launch a programme of demonstration projects into photovoltaics, but my officials are giving consideration to a proposal for a particular project which would be located at the university of Northumbria.

HEALTH

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those agencies in her Department which are being considered for privatisation or contractorisation.

Mr. Sackville: None of the agencies in this Department is being considered for privatisation or contractorisation at present. As announced by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary Office of Public Service and Science on 17 November at column 104, privatisation and contractorisation are always considered as alternatives to agency status before any agency is established, and would normally be re-examined as options during the course of each agency's periodic review. Any major change in the status of an agency would be the subject of an announcement.

Salaries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what remuneration has actually been paid by each health service trust in England to chairmen and non-executive directors in 1991-92;

(2) what was the total cost of remuneration of chairmen and non-executive directors of national health service authorities and trusts in each year since 1988-89;

(3) what remuneration was actually paid to chairmen and non-executive directors in 1991-92 by each regional health authority in England and Wales;

(4) what remuneration was actually paid by each family health service authority in England to chairmen and non-executive directors in 1991-92;

(5) if she will provide by district health authority in England details of remuneration paid to chairmen and non-executive directors in 1991-92 detailing (a) fees, (b) other emoluments, (c) pensions and (d) the total.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information from the 1991-92 annual accounts of health authorities, NHS trusts and family health services authorities in England will be available later in the year. Figures which are separately identifiable in the formats of the annual accounts for the earlier years are shown in the table. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Chairmen's remuneration	430	450	1,003
Members' remuneration	—	—	2,234

Notes:

1. The figures for health authorities relate to regional and district health authorities and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals.

2. Arrangements to remunerate—essentially to compensate—members of family health services authorities—formerly family practitioner committees—for their time spent on FHSA business were introduced only during 1990-91.

Expenditure

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide, by individual health authority in England, details of the increases in management and administrative expenditure together with the variations in in-patients, out-patients, day patients and accident and emergency patients treated since 1 April 1989 and the percentage variations thereof.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information from the annual accounts of health authorities and the relevant statistics for 1991-92 will be available later in the year. This will then enable comparisons to be drawn with the expenditure and activity data held centrally for 1989-90.

Henderson Hospital, Sutton

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions her Department has had with Wandsworth council social services on the possible effects on that Department of the threatened closure of the Henderson hospital, Sutton, Surrey; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her policy in respect of the supply to hospitals of plasma products produced from plasma unscreened for hepatitis C at the individual donor level after 1 January 1993;

(2) whether plasma products by Bio Products Laboratory conform to the committee on proprietary medicinal products' requirements in terms of source material having been fully screened for hepatitis C at the donor level.

Mr. Sackville: Plasma products supplied in this country will meet the requirements of the UK licensing authority and of the EC in relation to screening for antibodies to the hepatitis C virus.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent the Bio Products Laboratory is bound by commercial criteria in its policy on pricing products; and whether it is required to provide a commercial return on its activities.

Mr. Sackville: Our intention is that the Bio Products Laboratory should compete fairly in terms of the service, quality and price of its blood products within the Government's policy that this country should be self-sufficient in blood products derived from plasma donated by our voluntary unpaid donors. The Central Blood Laboratories Authority, which is responsible for the Bio Products Laboratory, accounts for its performance and publishes an annual report and financial statement.

Research Units

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to her reply of 3 July, Official Report, columns 743-44, what is the status of the report on the review of research units; who is being consulted; what is the closing date for any comments; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am considering this report and shall make an announcement shortly.

[1] Figures for 1991-92 are based on emergency patient journeys.

[2] Figures prior to 1991-92 are based on response within seven minutes.

[3] As a result of industrial action in this period, a complete year's return could not be provided. The figure shown represents approximately half the calls received.

[4] Figures for 1991-92 are provisional.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the consultation document on original pack dispensing.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 November, Official Report, column 566, on NHS redundancies, if she will list such figures as are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: The data available relate to those redundancies where a benefit is immediately payable under the National Health Service (Compensation for Premature Retirement) Regulations 1981. [3] Redundancy. (Due to closure of place of employment.)

[4] Interest of efficiency of service.

[5] Achieving a balance. (Replacement of Senior Consultants posts.)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her best estimates of the proportion of NHS staff who receive annual service pay increments; what was the cost of such increments in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what is the projected cost in 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Arts for Health

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 86, if she will provide details of Government funding for the British Health Care Arts Centre; and if she will now make it her policy to provide funding by her Department for Arts for Health in recognition of its advisory work on a national scale.

Mr. Sackville: We have no knowledge of the funding arrangements for the British Health Care Arts Centre. The Department's policy on the arts is as contained the reply I gave the right hon. Member on 19 October, at column 86.

NHS Estates, an agency of the Department, commissioned advice, on a fee-paying basis, from the British Health Care Arts Centre and others during the preparation of the guidance referred to in my earlier reply.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the Reed report on mentally disordered offenders; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Soon.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetic Resources

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that intellectual property rights should not be extended to genetic resources except in accordance with the international undertaking on plant genetic resources.

Mr. Curry: It is already the Department's policy to oppose the extension of intellectual property rights to plant genetic resources.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is currently being undertaken by his Department to persuade other countries to join (a) the Commission on Plant Genetic Resources and (b) the international undertaking on plant genetic resources.

Mr. Curry: The Government continue to argue for increased international collaboration on the conservation of plant genetic resources, in the context of the Food and Agriculture Organisation's commission and international undertaking and in other international forums.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to encourage the adoption of formal national plant genetic resources programmes throughout the world.

Mr. Curry: The Government, through the Overseas Development Administration, are a major funder of the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources and supports the international centres in the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research. The United Kingdom is also active in the European co-operative programme on crop genetic resources and we shall continue to participate in international efforts to establish networks of ex-situ plant genetic resource collections.

Mink

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to lay the next Mink (Keeping) Order following the expiry of the existing Order.

Mr. Soames: The Mink Keeping Order 1992 has been laid before Parliament today.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the value of reduction and percentage reduction of agricultural output in each EC country and overall based on constant yields and prices resulting from the MacSharry proposals for CAP reform.

Mr. Curry: The package of reform measures, based on the MacSharry proposals and agreed by Ministers in May, is expected to result in a reduction in agricultural output in the EC. Precise estimates of the impact will not be possible until the detailed implementation procedures have been finalised and will in any case depend on how individual farmers react in the light of changes in the economic environment. The Commission is to bring forward a paper dealing with the compatibility between CAP reform and the GATT outline agreement.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kenya

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about progress toward free and fair elections in Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We warmly welcome the Kenya Government's commitment to the holding of free and fair elections, as we do their decision to invite both international and domestic observers.

United States (Trade)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times he and his Ministers have spoken to the United States Government on trade matters in the past six months.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are in regular touch with the United States Government in trade matters. The frequency of these contacts has increased during the British presidency of the EC, particularly in the context of the GATT Uruguay round negotiations, to reinforce the efforts of the European Commission.

Hong Kong

18. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the prospects for the development of democracy in Hong Kong in the light of the Governor's recent proposals.

Mr. Goodlad: The Governor's proposals respond to a widespread wish in Hong Kong to see a broadening of democracy. They have been widely and warmly welcomed. We support them as the best way forward for Hong Kong. It will be for the Legislative Council to form a view on them early next year.

EC (Enlargement)

19. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on progress in the negotiations to enlarge the EC to include members of EFTA.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The UK Presidency intends to report to the Edinburgh European Council on the completion of the Community's preparatory work for the opening of accession negotiations with EFTA applicants. It will be for Heads of Government to decide there how to proceed with enlargement.

South Africa

20. Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with Commonwealth and EC colleagues about assisting in meeting the problems of post-apartheid South Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in touch with our EC partners and other members of the Commonwealth to identify ways in which we can assist South Africa during and following the transition to non-racial democracy. Discussions take place bilaterally and in a variety of fora, for example within European political co-operation, through the offices of the secretary-general and at periodic meetings of Commonwealth officials.

25. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had on constitutional reform in South Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The hon. Member will recall that my right hon. and noble Friend the Baroness Chalker of Wallasey visited South Africa in September. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister met President de Klerk on 14 November in London.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

21. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had in the Council of Ministers about the situation of the people of Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

24. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had in the EC Council of Ministers about the situation of the people of Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The situation in Bosnia has been discussed at every recent meeting of European Community Foreign Ministers, most recently in Brussels on 9 November and with WEU partners in Rome on 20 November. There are also regular discussions between officials of European Community governments.

President-elect Clinton

22. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to advise President-elect Clinton of terrorist threats in the United Kingdom and the impact of electoral statements on them.

Mr. Hurd: Our ambassador in Washington and his staff are in touch with the president-elect's foreign policy advisers about a range of matters of mutual interest, including security issues.

Maastricht Treaty

26. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received from other EC countries on the progress of Britain's ratification of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The process of ratification of the Maastricht treaty in all member states was discussed at the Foreign Affairs Council on 9 November. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs explained that the Government are committed to ratifying the treaty, and will make a start on the Committee stage of the Maastricht Bill before the Edinburgh European Council.

36. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken to inform the United Kingdom public about the treaty of Maastricht and the single market in the EC.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Government have published the text of the treaty, two memoranda to Parliament and, on 10 November, a short booklet on the Community and the Maastricht treaty, including a section on the advantages of the single market. This is being distributed free on request. A further memorandum explaining the main elements in the treaty will be available to Parliament before the Committee stage starts.

British Tourists

27. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to improve information services for British tourists planning visits to potentially dangerous foreign destinations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Travel advice, issued by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in consultation with overseas posts, is kept under constant review both in the United Kingdom and abroad.

It is disseminated quickly throughout the travel industry (and thus to the general public) by electronic information systems, and a selection of notices is available on BBC (Ceefax). Advice is also offered promptly in response to individual enquiries.

28. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made towards ratification of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Five member states have already ratified the Maastricht treaty: Luxembourg, France, Italy, Ireland and Greece. Others are in the process of ratification. Denmark will hold a second referendum next year, provided the member states can agree a satisfactory means of addressing Danish concerns. The Government will begin the Committee stage of the Maastricht Bill before the Edinburgh European Council.

European Summit (Edinburgh)

29. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the main subjects under discussion at the European summit in Edinburgh.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The main items under discussion are likely to include the single market, ratification of the Maastricht treaty, subsidiarity, and openness, future financing, the size of the European Parliament, enlargement, the Community's relations with the countries of central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, and the GATT negotiations.

EC and ASEAN Countries

30. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the prospects for developing relations between the European Community and the Association of South East Asian Nations countries.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The ASEAN countries are of growing importance to the Community, both in terms of regional stability and trade. We have devoted considerable attention to them during the United Kingdom Presidency; My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has personally attended two ministerial meetings with ASEAN in Manila. The outcome of the EC/ASEAN ministerial meeting last month will boost co-operation in a range of fields, including trade, environmental protection, technical co-operation and human rights.

Council of Europe

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments in the Council of Europe.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The House will know that the United Kingdom assumed the chairmanship of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe following the ministerial meeting on November in Strasbourg.

During the six months of our chairmanship, we intend to give priority to the programmes for assistance to the new democracies of eastern Europe, and to the reform of the human rights machinery. We shall also encourage an objective look at the operation of the Council in terms of its internal structures, its relationships with other organisations and its management procedures.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other foreign ministers regarding GATT; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has had several such discussions, most recently at the Foreign Affairs Council on 9 November, when Ministers urged the Commission to work for agreement with the United States.

Western European Union

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss with other member states of the Western European Union the contributions to the WEU Assembly of the former Minister for Defence Procurement on 5 December 1990.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Turkey

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the Prime Minister of Turkey to discuss the relationship between Turkey and the EC.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Turkish Prime Minister paid a bilateral working visit to London on 23 November, accompanied by the Foreign Minister. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed with him the future development of the relationship between the Community and Turkey, as part of a discussion of a wide range of issues of mutual interest. We have no plans at present for further bilateral meetings with the Turkish Government.

Southern Africa

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit southern Africa to assess the current political situation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend, Baroness Chalker of Wallasey visited southern Africa in September. We have no immediate plans to make further visits to the region.

EC Council of Ministers

37. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what items he has placed on the agenda of the next General Affairs meeting of the EC Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The major item on the agenda of 7 December Foreign Affairs Council will be preparation for the Edinburgh European Council (including enlargement and future financing). I expect that there will also be discussion of the Uruguay round, former Yugoslavia, migration and central and eastern Europe.

Cyprus

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the most recent round of talks on Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The set of ideas produced by the UN Secretary General, and endorsed by the Security Council as the basis for a settlement, was worked through in full in direct talks from 28 October to 11 November. There are significant areas of common ground. Important differences remain, and we are disappointed that some Turkish Cypriot positions are incompatible with the ideas. We welcome the agreement to resume talks in early March: and will continue to play a full part in encouraging progress.

Israel

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the progress of the peace process in Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The seventh round of bilateral negotations between Israel and Arab delegations resumed in Washington on 9 November after a break for the US elections. The atmosphere remains good. The negotiations are addressing substance. All sides are in our view seriously engaged. The incoming US Administration have declared their commitment to the process.

Mr. Allan Nicklin

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest meeting in Saudi Arabia with the Saudi Arabian authorities to discuss the case of Mr. Allan Nicklin.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's ambassador in Riyadh discussed the Nicklin case with the Saudi Minister for Foreign Affairs on 15 November and again with a senior official of the Saudi Ministry of Foreign affairs on 22 November. The Ambassador expressed the deep concern of Her Majesty's Government at Mr. Nicklin's continuing distraint and asked that he be allowed to leave Saudi Arabia as soon as possible.

Foreign Policy Achievements

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list the foreign policy achievements of the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community; and what further achievements he foresees before the year-end.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The London conference convened in August established a new framework for a negotiated settlement for the former Yugoslavia. We have ensured a substantial EC input to the middle east peace process and on humanitarian aid for Somalia. We have strengthened EC links with the countries of eastern and central Europe, notably through holding a successful EC summit in London last month with the leaders of Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. We have put EC relations with Japan and with the countries of the Association of South East Asian nations on a more constructive footing through the EC/Japan summit in London in July and the EC/ASEAN Ministerial meeting in Manila last month. We have put in place arrangements for an enhanced political dialogue between the EC and Turkey. On GATT, the Presidency's contacts with the negotiating parties served as a catalyst to obtain the recent EC/US deal on agriculture. We are now working for early agreement in Geneva on the Uruguay Round. Before the end of the year, the Presidency will hold EC summits with the United States and Canada which will enhance joint co-operation with both countries. We expect further to strengthen EC relations with central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union and to make further progress towards opening accession negotiations with applicant countries from the European Free Trade Association. At the Edinburgh European Council we also aim to bring to fruition other priorities for the United Kingdom Presidency which I outlined to the House on 24 November.

Cambodia

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in Cambodia with the international peace accords and in particular with the cantonment and disarming of the troops of the various factions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: There has been considerable progress towards the implementation of the comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict. Despite occasional ceasefire violations, peace has returned to most of Cambodia. More than 170,000 refugees formerly in the camps on the Thai-Cambodian border have returned to Cambodia without a single fatality as a result of mines; and preparations are well in hand for the holding of free and fair elections in April-May 1993, with more than 1·5 million Cambodians now registered.

By the end of September some 50,000 soldiers of these factions had been contoned by UNTAC. We regret that so far the Kymer Rouge has not begun to meet its obligations under the Paris agreements to canton 70 per cent. of the forces.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 26 November 1992

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Land and Property

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what steps are taken to secure an independent valuation of church land and property before disposal.

Mr. Michael Alison: The Commissioners normally ask for an independent valuation when their statutory consent is sought to a sale of ecclesiastical property. The property investments which they themselves own are professionally valued every year.

TRANSPORT

Shipping and Seamen

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that new arrangements which may be brought forward for the General Register and Record Office of Shipping and Seamen will include requirements which specifically protect the records of ships' movements and the records of sailors in world war I and world war II.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend is aware that the records presently held are of historical interest. They will continue to be retained under Public Record Office (PRO) rules.

Small Ships Register

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) which organisation submitted the lowest tender in respect of providing a contract service for the Small Ships Register;

(2) if he will give full details of the tender process followed with regard to the contract for the Small Ships Register including a list of the tenderers, a list of those short-listed and the successful tenderer;

(3) what factors were taken into account in deciding the placement of the contract for the Small Ships Register.

Mr. Norris [holding answers 19 and 20 November 1992]: The tender process followed the Department's normal rules for competitive tender which comply with guidance notes issued by the Treasury's central unit on purchasing, with EC regulations and with Government accounting.

Seven firms were invited to tender, but offers were received from only three. In addition an inhouse bid was submitted by the Department's client division (The Register of Shipping and Seamen).

Placement was decided on compliance with the Department's specification, value for money and quality. The contract was awarded to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency which submitted the tender which best met these requirements.

It is not departmental policy to release information on firms tendering as this is regarded as commercial-in confidence.

Consultants

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the decision of the Government to cancel Cooper and Lybrand's commission to prepare a report on the post-monopoly charges for use of British Rail's rail track and infrastructure.

Mr. Freeman: Coopers and Lybrand is continuing to advise the Government on liberalising access to British Rail's track and infrastructure and charges for its use. The Government intend to publish proposals soon.

Nuclear Material

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the safety standards required in the transportation of plutonium in respect of the temperature and length of time of ship fires.

Mr. Norris: The safety test standards required for the transport of all radioactive material by all modes are those prescribed in the International Atomic Energy Agency's publication "Safety Series No. 6, 1985 Edition" (as amended 1990). These include a thermal test at a minimum temperature of 800 deg C sustained for a period of 30 minutes, after which the package must be shown to maintain its essential functions of containment, radiation shielding and criticality safety to prescribed limits.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications of kinetic energy for safety standards which apply to the transportation in casks of plutonium in British coastal waters where a ship is travelling at 15 knots; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Safety standards for the carriage of radioactive material in such flasks take into account the factors that could affect possible accidental damage to the cask, including energy absorbed. The fraction of the kinetic energy of a ship that would be so absorbed in an accident would be small; most of it would be dissipated in deformation of the ship's structure.

Working Group

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the submissions to be considered by the joint International Atomic Energy Authority-International Maritime Organisation-United Nations Environment Programme.

Mr. Norris: Submissions to the joint IAEA-IMO-UNEP working group have not yet been completed. I shall place in the Library copies of any submissions that the United Kingdom makes.

Okehampton Bypass

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many acres of public open space were lost in the construction of the Okehampton bypass.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 23 November 1992]: Of the land acquired for the Okehampton bypass:

1·9 acres were open space;

approximately 20 acres were land which had previously been used by the public for recreation, and in respect of which the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport accepted the recommendation of the inquiry inspector that they be treated as "open space".

In addition to these 22 acres, temporary access rights were obtained to a further 1·6 acres during the construction period.

Road Capacity, Heathrow

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he is currently undertaking as to the capacity of roads in the west London and Heathrow areas to accommodate present and projected traffic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The capacity of roads is a matter for the responsible highway authority. The British Airports Authority has consulted widely about its proposals for a fifth terminal at Heathrow airport and my Department is considering with them what improvements to the trunk road network may be necessary as a result of these proposals.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what communication his Department has had with the Clinton-Gore presidential transition team on policies towards the international transport of plutonium.

Mr. Norris: None.

Heathrow Airport (Emergency Services)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the capacity of the emergency services to deal with any crash at or near Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport has taken advice from the Civil Aviation Authority and BAA plc on this important matter.

I am advised that the emergency services at Heathrow are able to mount a massive response in the event of any disaster occurring in the vicinity of the airport. The current procedures ensure, initially, that air traffic control (ATC) provides the pilot of an aircraft in distress with whatever assistance he requires to effect a safe landing. This includes immediately alerting the ground emergency services.

BAA manage the emergency services at Heathrow and under the terms of the aerodrome licence issued to it by the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA), which derives from guidelines laid down by the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO), it is obliged to provide a specific number of staff, fire-fighting and emergency equipment and medical expertise to deal with any aircraft disasters which occur either at Heathrow airport itself or within a two-mile radius.

The emergency services provided by BAA exceed by almost double the quotas specified in the licence. Nevertheless, close ties are maintained with the police, fire brigades, ambulance services and local hospitals to ensure that back-up services are available to provide additional and immediate assistance should the need arise.

Continuous reviews of the system ensure that the emergency procedures are kept up to date. Annual exercises conducted with volunteers and involving all the emergency services and local hospitals ensure that all concerned are familiar with the procedures. The last such exercise took place on 8 October 1992.

Driving Tests

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce into the driving test requirements for motorway driving and night driving.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have no such plans. Including motorway and night driving in a test would imply a multi-part test without clear evidence that the significant extra costs would be justified. But I shall be considering whether, in the light of the recent consultation exercise by the Driving Standards Agency, these topics should be tackled more thoroughly in the theoretical element of the test.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what substantive changes have been made to the requirements for the driving test since 1962.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Key changes have been—the introduction in 1969 of a separate test for the drivers of heavy goods vehicles; the introduction in 1985 of a separate test for drivers of coaches and buses;

the introduction in 1989 of a motorcycle test with the examiner accompanying the candidate; the introduction in 1991 of a reverse-parking manoeuvre into the car driving test; the introduction in 1992 of a double-length driving test for certain disqualified drivers.

Local Safety Schemes

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what applications he has received from local authorities in their transport policies and programmes submissions for schemes which are likely to give rates of return in excess of those typically achieved by local safety schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 25 November 1992]: It is not possible to make such a direct comparison. Local safety schemes are assessed according to their first year rate of return in casualty reduction terms. Major road improvement schemes are subject to a detailed cost benefit analysis over a period of 30 years.

Returns provided by local authorities indicate that the amount earmarked for local safety schemes in the transport supplementary grant settlement for 1991-92 produced an average first year rate of return of 76 per cent. and over the first three years an average rate of return of 213 per cent.

Initial analysis of authorities' transport policies and programme submissions for 1993-94 indicates that the average benefit to cost ratio of major scheme bids for TSG is 4·4:1.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the 1993-94 specific allocation in transport supplementary grant for local safety schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 25 November 1992]: The specific allocation to local safety schemes will be announced to Parliament by the Secretary of State as part of the local roads capital settlement, probably next month.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when guidance will be issued to local authorities to enable them to use signing for red light and speed cameras for deterrence and road safety purposes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 25 November 1992]: Trials are currently taking place to determine the most effective signing for camera installations. I expect to be able to issue guidance after these trials are completed early next year.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total bid of local authorities for transport supplementary grant for local safety schemes for 1993-94.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 25 November 1992]: A total of £117 million.

Driving Standards Agency

235. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, columns 81-86, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency's visits to (a) Brussels on 4 November 1991 and (b) Paris on 12 October.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The total cost of each of these visits to the Exchequer was as follows:

Place	Air fare	Total
Brussels	£257·60	£394·36
Paris	£263·80	£414·85

Vehicle Certification Agency

238. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, columns 81-86, what has been the cost to the Exchequer during the last 12 months of the chief executive of the vehicle inspectorate's visits to (a) Munich and (b) Madrid.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There is expected to be no real cost to the Exchequer in respect of the Vehicle Certification Agency's chief executive travelling to Munich and Madrid because the agency's costs are covered by fees paid by applicants for type approval.

Driving Licences

240. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what documentation is included with new driving licences sent out from the Driver Vehicle Licensing Centre at Swansea; and at what cost.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency at Swansea sends a basic information booklet and an organ donor card to drivers with their driving licences.

The annual cost of providing the booklet is £152,000. The cost of the organ donor card is met by the Department of Health.

British Rail

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 424, if he will list the six companies who tendered for the consultancy on the sale of British Rail's freight operations.

Mr. Freeman: This information is commercially confidential.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, columns 81-86, what has been the cost to the Exchequer during the last 12 months of the chief executive of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre's visits to (a) Dublin, (b) Germany and (c) Veendam, Holland, in October 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The costs are £567[1], £685 and £531 respectively.

[1] A joint visit (September 1991) to both Dublin and Coleraine.

A1 (Upgrading)

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what asessment his Department has made on the effect of the upgrading of the A1 to motorway standard on trade in the north east.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None. There is little doubt the upgrading of the route will open up development opportunities given the benefits of better access and communication. But it is too early to make accurate assessments.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 26 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Iraq

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister how many defendants in the Matrix Churchill case had assisted (a) the Secret Intelligence Service or (b) the Security Service in monitoring Iraq's defence capability.

The Prime Minister: It would be contrary to normal practice to comment further on intelligence matters.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Press Intrusion

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will publish his proposals on press intrusion into the private lives of individuals.

Mr. Brooke: I shall announce what action the Government propose to take over press regulation after I have considered Sir David Calcutt's review of press self-regulation, which I hope to receive early in the new year.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what representations he has received about the amendment of existing regulations to extend access by senior citizens living in sheltered housing accommodation to concessionary television licences; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to relax the regulations affecting sheltered housing complexes to allow greater access for senior citizens to the concessionary television licence scheme;

(3) if he will estimate the cost of the existing licence concession scheme for retired people living in sheltered housing complexes;

(4) if he will agree to meet representatives of local authorities to discuss the future development of the concessionary scheme for retired people living in sheltered housing complexes.

Mr. Brooke: Since 13 April this year, I have received 97 letters from Members of the House and 103 from members of the public, local authorities and other organisations on the subject of the concessionary television licence scheme. The current cost of the concessionary scheme in lost licence revenue is approximately £40 million a year. The Government have repeatedly made it clear that they have no plans to amend or extend the regulations governing the scheme, which were thoroughly overhauled in 1988 after long and careful consideration. I therefore consider that no useful purpose would be served by a meeting with representatives of local authorities to discuss the future of the scheme.

External Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all of the reports commissioned from external consultants since April 1992; how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Correspondence

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to be able to respond to the letter of 18 November from the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye concerning Mackay and Sons Ltd., Ross-shire; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: I will write to the hon. Member shortly in response to his letter of 18 November. I can tell him that Customs are prepared exceptionally to renegotiate payment in this case.

Regulatory Measures

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April.

Mr. Dorrell: No such measures have been taken.

Aero Technologies Ltd.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investigations have been conducted by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise officers into the trading activities of Aero Technologies Ltd. with (a) Iran and (b) Iraq in military equipment.

Sir John Cope: It would not be appropriate for information relating to any particular investigation to be made public other than in the course of court proceedings.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Departments have carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have laid draft regulations under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act before Parliament on 17 November in order to implement the second banking co-ordination and consolidated supervision directives. Although these measures are long and complex, and amend a number of Acts, they implement two measures that are central to a single market in banking. This will allow EC credit institutions—broadly speaking, banks and building societies—to offer banking services throughout the Community on the basis of a single authorisation under the prudential supervision of a single supervisor.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: I am responsible to the Chancellor for such matters.

Civil List

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to initiate a revision of the 10-year agreement concerning the civil list so as to include it within the 1·5 per cent. pay ceiling policy.

Mr. Lamont: No. The royal household committed itself on 12 November to apply the pay limitations for 1993.

Widows' Pensions

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's most recent estimate of the loss to the Exchequer if widows' pensions were to be treated as non-taxable income.

Mr. Dorrell: At 1992-93 levels, the revenue cost of exempting from tax widows' pensions, including widowed mothers' allowances, would be about £100 million.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of imports and exports and the trade balance in manufactured goods in current and real terms for each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Portillo: Information on imports, exports and the balance for manufactured goods is published regularly in the Central Statistical Office's "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and is available on a quarterly basis on the Central Statistical Office databank which may be accessed through the Library of the House.

British Telecom

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to sell the Government's residual shareholding in British Telecommunications plc.

Mr. Dorrell: As my right hon. Friend announced in the debate on the autumn statement on 18 November, at column 303, the Government intend to sell all or part of their residual shareholding in BT next year. No decisions have been taken about the precise timing and the number of shares to be sold. We will shortly begin to appoint advisers to certain of the key roles and to incur preliminary sale costs.

Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a spring supplementary estimate for Her Majesty's Treasury's sale of shares in British Telecommunications plc and sale or redemption of privatised companies' debt vote—class XVIII, vote 19. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure, not expected to exceed £2 million, will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund. Preliminary and main sale expenses incurred in 1993-94 in connection with the sale of shares will be met from receipts from the sale.

Iraq

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Treasury became aware that Bank of Credit and Commerce International accounts were being used to facilitate arms trade with Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 17 November 1992]: So far as can be ascertained, the Treasury has not had information that BCCI accounts have been used to facilitate arms trade with Iraq, although it has seen the material in Senator Kerry's report on this point.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now authorise publication of appendix 8 to the Bingham report on BCCI.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 November 1992]: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has already made clear to the House, the balance of public interest weighs against publishing any of the appendices to the Bingham report.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charterline

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 982, how many companies, other than Price Waterhouse, applied for the tender to pilot the charterline service.

Mr. Waldegrave: Six.

Public Appointments

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place the list of names on the central database within the public appointments unit within the Office of Public Service and Science in the Library.

Mr. Robert Jackson: No. Information about the 5,500 names on the public appointments unit's database is provided in confidence and, under the Data Protection Act 1984, publication of the names would be precluded. But the unit is always ready to receive details of those whom hon. Members consider suitable for consideration for public appointments, and individuals are free to nominate themselves on application forms available from the unit. At the present time there is a particular need for nominations of more women suitable for national level appointments and for names of members of the ethnic minorities.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a full list of public appointments, with the time period of appointment, stating whether part or full-time, and whether expenses, including child care, are payable in each case.

Mr. Robert Jackson: "Public Bodies", published annually by the Cabinet Office, gives details of the bodies to which Ministers make appointments, and whether the appointments are part time or full time. A copy of the 1991 edition is in the Library of the House; the 1992 edition is expected to be published at the end of the year. Responsibility for the period of an appointment rests with each appointing Minister. No information is kept centrally about such terms which vary in length but in most instances do not exceed five years. The Women's National Commission's "Handbook for Women's Organisations", also in the Library, includes some information about the normal terms of appointments to some bodies.

The authorisation of travelling and subsistence expenses is the responsibility of individual Departments, but such expenses are normally met. Child care expenses may also be reimbursed where this help secures the appointment of someone who might otherwise have to decline, or to avoid the risk of non attendance.

Market Testing

Mr. Devа: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish figures showing the year on year increase in the amount of central Government market testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 23 November 1992, column 606-7.]: The details of the market testing plans of main Departments were published yesterday in the citizens charter White Paper. The breakdown of the market testing plans for other Departments and agencies is as follows.

EDUCATION

East Gate School, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the address of the East Gate school, Nottinghamshire, listed in his Department's table of school examination results.

Mr. Forth: The address of the school referred to—the William Crane School—is East Gate, Minver crescent, Aspley, Nottingham, NG8 5PN.

Students (Overseas Placements)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students are currently on placements abroad as an integral part of their first degree courses.

Mr. Forman: Information on total numbers of students on placements abroad is not available within the Department. Figures are however available for students studying abroad under the ERASMUS and LINGUA programmes, which by definition require placements abroad to be integrated in the home course. For 1991-92 about 6,500 United Kingdom students undertook periods of study abroad on this basis.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken to ensure that students currently on placements abroad as an integral part of their first degree courses have had their grants adjusted to take account of the devaluation of sterling.

Mr. Forman: There are special rates of grant for students studying at overseas institutions for at least one term as a necessary part of their courses. They are fixed for the current academic year by the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1992—SI 1992 No. 1270—which came into force on 1 September 1992. The rates represent only a contribution towards costs faced abroad, and are not normally revised during the year on account of currency or other fluctuations. My right hon. Friend will review the rates in due course when he makes the new regulations to come into force on 1 September 1993.

Interim Funding, London

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to end his Department's post-Inner London education authority interim funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Government are providing £250 million in inner London education grant over the first five years in which the inner London boroughs have responsibility for education. This is transitional support to protect local tax payers while the boroughs bring the education spending they inherited from the Inner London education authority under control, and will end in March 1995. The Department has also provided grant totalling £1·5 million over the three years 1990-91 to 1992-93 in order to enable 29 Londonwide educational voluntary organisations to make new funding arrangements with the London boroughs and charitable trusts. Over the same three year period the Department has provided pump-priming funding to the Foundation for Young Musicians—FYM—totalling £336,000.

There is no commitment to extending the scheme of grants to the Londonwide educational voluntary organisations or FYM grants beyond 31 March 1993 although an application from the FYM is under consideration.

Grant-maintained Schools

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research his Department has commissioned into the effect of the acquisition of grant-maintained status on school effectiveness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: It is not necessary to commission special research into the effect of the acquisition of grant-maintained status on school effectiveness. The publication of school performance tables under the parents charter, in which each school's type is clearly stated, will help all concerned to judge the relative effectiveness of different types of school. Her Majesty's inspectorate's observation of GM schools has already attested to their effectiveness. The Office for Standards in Education will undertake some full inspections of GM schools over the coming year as part of its programme for training registered inspectors.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those local education authorities in which at least 15 per cent. of primary or secondary schools will be grant-maintained by January 1993, and those local education authorities in which at least 10 per cent. either of primary or secondary pupils will be educated in grant-maintained schools in January 1993.

Mr. Forth: On the basis of proposals approved to date, in the following LEAs at least 15 per cent. of secondary schools will be GM by January 1993:

Berkshire
Bromley
Dorset
Ealing

Essex
Gloucestershire
Hillingdon
Kensington
Kent
Lincolnshire
Northamptonshire
Surrey
Sutton
Wandsworth
Warwickshire

There are no LEAs in which 15 per cent. of primary schools will be GM by January 1993.

On the basis of schools already operating as GM or approved for incorporation up to and including April 1993, and using latest available pupil numbers, we estimate that in the following LEAs at least 10 per cent. of secondary pupils will be educated in GM schools by April 1993. In the time available it is not possible to calculate figures for January 1993.

Barnet
Berkshire
Birmingham
Brent
Bromley
Buckinghamshire
Calderdale
Croydon
Cumbria
Dorset
Ealing
Essex
Gloucestershire
Hammersmith
Hillingdon
Kensington
Kent
Kingston-on-Thames
Lincolnshire
Norfolk
Northamptonshire
Surrey
Sutton
Walsall
Wandsworth
Warwickshire
Wolverhampton

There are no LEAs at present where we estimate that 10 per cent. of primary pupils will be educated in GM schools by April 1993. Pupil numbers are based on January 1991 form 7 returns in respect of LEAs and numbers given in proposals for GM status submitted by schools in the case of schools operating or approved for GM status.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Visa Appeals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are his estimates of the savings resulting from the provisions contained in the Asylum and Immigration Bill to abolish a right of appeal for those refused a visa to visit the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The appeals to which the hon. Member refers are normally dealt with on the papers only and so make fewer demands on resources than cases where hearings take place. It is difficult, therefore, to estimate precisely what savings may result. However, these provisions will enable us to use resources to tackle priorities more effectively.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals against refusal to grant visas to visit the United Kingdom have been lodged, to date, in each of the last three years, on the basis of nationality; how many such appeals were (a) upheld, (b) refused, (c) withdrawn and (d) awaiting determination at the latest available date.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The immigration appellate authorities keep statistics by the country from which the appeal originates, not by nationality. Visit visa statistics are not kept separately from other appeals against refusal of short-term visas and the figures given are achieved by applying a typical proportion of visit visa appeals to the total in each period. On that basis, the number of appeals against refusal to grant visas to visit the United Kingdom that have been lodged in each of the last three years, by country, is set out in the table.

The information requested concerning the number of visit visa appeals currently awaiting determination is not available.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals, in all categories of entry clearance to the United Kingdom, are, to date, outstanding; what is the average delay, between appeal applications being lodged and appeals being heard at each appellate centre in the United Kingdom; how many adjudicators are in place currently; and what proportion of each adjudicators' work load at present is taken up considering appeals against refusal to grant visit visas.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As of 30 October 1992 there were 23,047 appeals outstanding. The average time between an appeal being lodged and it being heard is 16 months. This includes an average period of nine months for the parties to prepare their case and indicate readiness for the appeal to be heard. Cases where parties have so indicated are now being listed for full hearing on the following dates at the appellate centres:

Thanet house	17 May 1993
Harmondsworth	1 May 1993
Birmingham	14 January 1993
Manchester	1 April 1993
Leeds	1 February 1993
Glasgow	1 March 1993

Hearings can sometimes be brought forward if the appellant so requests and an earlier date becomes available. Steps are being taken to shorten the time taken, wherever possible, for a case to come before an adjudicator for example, by increasing hearing room availability and increased administrative efficiency.

Cases where no hearing is required are currently being determined on the papers within six to eight weeks of the parties indicating they are ready for the case to be dealt with by the adjudicator.

There are 19 full-time adjudicators and 78 part-time adjudicators in post. It is not possible to calculate what proportion of the adjudicators' time is taken considering appeals against refusal to grant visit visas.

Legal Aid

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what studies he made, before deciding to remove or reduce the rights of people in particular income groups to receive legal aid, into the ability of people within those income groups to pay the contributions which are now to be required of them.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the light of the Government's priorities for public expenditure and the rapid growth in the cost of legal aid, the Lord Chancellor and I have considered carefully what can be afforded and have taken measures which will ensure that the resources available are directed to those whose need is greatest.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people will have their rights to legal aid removed or reduced as a result of the measures he announced on 12 November.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Although such estimates are necessarily subject to many assumptions, we estimate that around 2 per cent. of households will no longer be eligible for legal aid as a result of measures taken to align legal aid allowances with income support levels. Around 14 per cent. of households who now receive legal aid free of contribution will be required to contribute. In addition, about 8 per cent. of households who fall out of eligibility in the current year because their income has risen above the upper income limit will not be restored to eligibility as a result of the decision not to uprate the upper limit in April of next year.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what analysis he has made of the reasons for the increase in spending on legal aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The reasons for the increase in legal aid expenditure are complex. There are two basic components involved. First, the number of people assisted under the various parts of the legal aid scheme is increasing—around 3 million acts of assistance were paid for in 1991-92 as compared with around 2 million in 1985-86. Secondly, the unit cost of each act of assistance is increasing at a higher rate than inflation.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he will make a statement on the error which the Benefits Agency committed in assessing applications for civil legal aid between 1 October 1991 and 30 March 1992; and what compensation he proposes to pay legal aid practitioners for their costs incurred in checking whether their clients meet the criteria for reassessment set out in the Benefits Agency letter of 2 November.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on Tuesday 17 November, Official Report, columns 103-4.

Justiciary (Ethnic Origin)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many members of the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on the appointment of magistrates for each of the commission areas in England and Wales are of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of members of the Lord Chancellor's advisory committees who are of Afro-Caribbean or Asian racial origin are as follows:

Commission area	Asian	Afro Caribbean
Cleveland	1	—
East Sussex	1	—
Inner London	1	1
Isle of Wight	—	1
Leicestershire	—	2
Middlesex	1	1
Nottinghamshire	—	1
Oxfordshire	—	1
Staffordshire	1	—
Tyne and Wear	—	1
West Midlands	4	—
West Yorkshire	4	—

No other advisory committees presently have members of Afro-Caribbean or Asian racial origin.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many justices of the peace, for each of the commission areas in England and Wales are of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not recorded centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost, but of 2,017 appointments made in 1991, a total of 97 were from the ethnic minorities. That is a total higher than the proportion of ethnic minorities in the age group from which magistrates are normally appointed.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Timber

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the International Tropical Timber Organisation concerning (a) the implementation of its Target 2000 campaign for a sustainable timber trade and (b) the level of imports and exports of tropical timber.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We fully support the objectives of Target 2000. We are proposing to fellow members of the International Tropical Timber Organisation in the context of the current renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement, that its resources and methods of operation be improved to enable it to promote the objectives of Target 2000 as effectively as possible. The ITTO's priority objective should be the promotion of sustainable forest management at national level and hence sustainable trade.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of United Kingdom or multilateral overseas aid money being improperly appropriated by Government or other officials in Kenya, Somalia, Zaire or Namibia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no evidence of improper appropriation of aid funds provided by the United Kingdom or multilateral organisations. We have rigorous safeguards in order to minimise the risk that our aid resources are misused. These include competitive tendering wherever possible, and direct payment to contractors. Purchasing agents have to be British and approved by us; payment is made direct to the supplier. There is an extensive system of financial control, reporting and audit, backed up by physical monitoring on the ground to help ensure that aid is achieving the intended purpose.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate has been made of the percentage of overseas aid provided by Her Majesty's Government which reaches its intended recipients and of the percentage which is sold on the black market.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration has systems and controls, second to none, for seeking to ensure that British aid is used for the purpose intended. We have a well-established system of financial reporting, physical monitoring and audit, including visits to projects by British officials, to ensure that our aid is achieving the intended benefits on the ground. If there were any evidence of corruption related to a British aid-funded contract, we would investigate vigorously and, if proven, withdraw from it.

World Bank

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of the World bank report "Effective Implementation: Key to Development Input" for the Government's financial support for the World bank and for the role played by the United Kingdom executive director of the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The report on effective implementation of projects financed by the World bank recommends a number of changes in policy, priorities and procedures. The president of the bank has welcomed the report and has proposed an immediate start on the measures necessary to strengthen its performance. The report is now being considered by executive directors.

The report itself makes no recommendations on funding, nor on the role of executive directors. Our support for the 10th replenishment of the International Development Association, will help provide the basis for implementing the report's findings. Our executive director will continue to play an important and active role.

Rain Forests

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the influence that the destruction of tropical rain forests in developing countries has had on the Government's policy towards the third world debt crisis.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The links between international debt and deforestation are complex. The pressures which cause deforestation exist independently of the size of a country's debt. Nevertheless, for wider economic and developmental reasons, Britain has led the way in promoting debt relief measures, particularly for the poorest.

Twelve low-income, highly indebted countries have benefited from substantial reductions in their official debt as a result of the Prime Minister's Trinidad terms initiative. The terms currently reduce eligible payments due to Governments by as much as 50 per cent. We continue, however, to press for even more generous debt relief to be made available to those countries that need it.

For middle income countries, which owe their debt largely to banks, we are providing support for commercial debt reduction through the Brady plan. This international agreement allows International Monetary Fund and World bank to devote some of their lending resources to facilitate voluntary debt reduction agreements between banks and debtors. Brazil, for instance, has been able to agree in principle a deal which will effectively reduce its £29 billion debt to banks by around a third.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Treasury minute on the first to 11th reports from the Committee of Public Accounts 1992-93, paragraph 161, what proposals he has to change the auditing arrangements of the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no plans to change the auditing arrangements for the Commonwealth Development Corporation. Under the provisions of the CDC Act 1978, as amended in 1982 and 1986, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is responsible for appointing external auditors and for laying the CDC's annual report and accounts before Parliament. In addition, the CDC is subject to scrutiny by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Aid and Trade Projects

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each aid and trade provision project since 1989, with the companies and the sums of money involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Aid agreements involving aid and trade provision funds have been concluded with Governments of developing countries since 1989 for projects for which the following companies are lead United Kingdom contractors.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a table showing how much of the assistance which was given by the United Kingdom to Somalia in each of the last 10 years went to the northern region known as the Republic of Somaliland, giving the figure and percentage of the total given (a) in humanitarian aid, whether by cash grant or in kind, (b) in development aid, whether by cash grant or in kind, (c) loans and (d) in any other form in each year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 24 November 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to his question of Monday 23 November, at column 453, which gave a financial summary of our assistance to Somalia for each of the past 10 years. Aid is given to the country as a whole and statistics showing expenditure by region are not readily available.

Albania

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response his Department made to the International Committee of the Red Cross appeal in July for food aid for targeted groups in need in Albania; whether that response was made bilaterally or through the EC; what total response was made by the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 November 1992]: We are aware of the appeal that was made in September and are in touch with the British Red Cross about it. It is sending a delegation to Albania next week to assess how the United Kingdom can best respond to the appeal and we expect it to submit a proposal on its return. We have already provided £1·5 million of bilateral humanitarian assistance to Albania. The bulk of our contribution is through the EC which has already this year provided 80 mecu of food aid direct to the Albanian Government, and agreed a further tranche of 40 mecu in October.

Aid Budget

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the aid budget is spent in dollars and ecus; and what effect there has been on the purchasing power of the overseas aid budget since the recent devaluation of sterling.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 November 1992]: In 1992-93 it is estimated that £73 million, 4 per cent., of the provision for overseas aid for developing countries will be paid in US dollars and that £375 million, 20 per cent., will be paid in ecu. Given that exchange rates move up as well as down during the course of a year, it is not yet possible to predict what impact recent changes in the value of sterling will have on the purchasing power of the aid programme for developing countries.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the overseas aid budget in both percentage and cash terms is spent through multilateral organisations; how much, in both percentage and cash terms, is provided in non-sterling currencies; which currencies are used; and what is the impact on the aid budget in terms of additional sterling resources required to finance these commitments since the devaluation of sterling since the United Kingdom left the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 November 1992]: In 1992-93 it is estimated that £829 million, 44 per cent. of the provision for overseas aid for developing countries, will be spent through multilateral organisations. Approximately £462 million, 25 per cent. of the aid programme for developing countries, is paid in the following non-sterling currencies: the ecu and, in smaller amounts, the currencies of Australia, Bangladesh, Belgium, Botswana, eastern Caribbean, Fiji, France, Germany, Japan, Jordan, Netherlands, Solomon Islands, South Africa, United States and Vanuatu. Given that exchange rates move up as well as down during the course of a year, it is not yet possible to say what impact recent changes in the value of sterling will have.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Albania

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic contacts there have been in recent weeks with Albania; and if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's current relations with Albania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The British chargé d'affaires in Tirana is in daily contact with the Albanian authorities. Her Majesty's ambassador at Rome, who is concurrently accredited to Tirana, also visited Albania recently and met President Berisha on 23 November. They discussed among other issues the United Kingdom's and Albania's close interest in political developments in the former Yugoslavia. Our relations with Albania are developing rapidly and are now very good.

Visa Appeals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the total cost to his Department, over each of the past three years, of work associated with appeals by those appealing against refusal to grant visas to visit the United Kingdom; how many explanatory statements have been prepared over this period by British posts overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Information on costs is not available in the form requested.

The number of explanatory statements prepared by British posts overseas in the last three years is as follows:

	Settlement	Non-settlement	Total
1989	4,330	7,303	11,633
1990	4,970	12,445	17,415
1991	4,162	12,349	16,511
TOTALS	13,462	32,097	45,559

Special Operations Executive

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to release the records of the wartime Special Operations Executive.

Mr. Hurd: As part of the initiative which I announced on 14 May to review records withheld for more than 30 years, work has started on reviewing the SOE archives.

A large proportion of the original records of SOE were destroyed, both by SOE itself at the end of the war, and in a fire at the Baker street headquarters in late 1945. The remaining archives are substantial and complex and the complete review will take some time. However, a first batch should be released in the second half of 1993.

President de Klerk

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions were held with President de Klerk during his visit to the United Kingdom on 14 and 15 November.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 November 1992]: The Prime Minister had a full discussion with President de Klerk. Their talks covered both the reform process in South Africa, and regional matters.

Malawi

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will now take to secure the release of Mrs. Vera Chirwa currently held in prison in Malawi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the death of Orton Chirwa on 20 October, we have again urged the Malawian Government to release Vera Chirwa on humanitarian grounds. We shall continue to take every opportunity to press for her release.

South African Arms Sales

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he received the letter from Mr. Abdul S. Minty, director of the World Campaign Against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, concerning Mr. Mark Thatcher and the sale of South African arms to Saudi Arabia; and if he will publish his reply.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A letter from Mr. Minty dated 3 June 1992 was received in the office of the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on that day. The reply, from an official, dated 25 June, stated:

> "The United Kingdom adheres to UN Security Council resolutions 558 and 591 concerning, inter alia, the import of South African-produced arms. We take seriously allegations of British involvement in any contravention of these resolutions."

In the case the hon. Member raises, we have no knowledge as to whether South African-produced arms were purchased by customers in third countries. But we shall investigate any alleged British involvement if it is established that such arms were imported in breach of the above resolutions.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what position was adopted by Britain's representative on the United Nations 421 Arms Embargo Committee of the Security Council's consideration of the report concerning Mr. Mark Thatcher and the sale of arms to Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There has been no substantive discussion within the committee to date, although the chairman has undertaken to seek information on the report from the relevant parties. But if the committee were to establish that arms have been imported in breach of United Nations Security Council resolution 558, we would of course be prepared to investigate any allegations of British involvement.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Government of the United States of America concerning the activities of Mr. Mark Thatcher on arms deals involving South Africa; and what action he took in response.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not aware of any such representations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Yugoslavia

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for granting entry visas to those from former Yugoslavia; and what criteria he has agreed with the International Red Cross and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for selecting those suitable for entry.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Visas will be granted to those nationals of the former Yugoslavia requiring visas where they meet the requirement of the immigration rules. Visas will also be granted where the applicant meets the definition of a refugee under the terms of the 1951 convention or has been displaced from his home by the civil war in the former Yugoslavia and, because of close links with the United Kingdom, including close family ties, the United Kingdom is the most appropriate country of refuge for that person. In addition, visas will be granted to those people and their dependants whom the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross judge to be in need of evacuation, and whom the United Kingdom has agreed to receive. We understand that initially the international organisations would wish to evacuate detainees from the existing detention camps in Bosnia.

Operation Container

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects Operation Container to end in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Every effort is being made to bring down the number of prisoners in police cells. Provided that the prison population remains at or below its current level, I would expect the bulk of the police cells problem in Greater Manchester to end early next year. However, until Manchester prison becomes fully operational in June 1944, a rise in the prison population could lead to further calls on police cells.

Prison Education Service

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of qualified teachers employed at each of the London prisons on 18 November.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Full and part-time salaried teachers employed in prisons have relevant qualifications. The numbers employed on 18 November in the following prisons were:

	Number
Her Majesty's Prison Belmarsh	6
Her Majesty's Prison Brixton	5
Her Majesty's Prison Holloway	9
Her Majesty's Prison Pentonville	6

	Number
Her Majesty's Prison Wandsworth	6
Her Majesty's Prison Wormwood Scrubs	3

In addition to salaried staff, sessionally paid teachers are employed whose numbers vary according to the number and range of classes provided at each establishment.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the funding for each of the last five years for education services in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Total expenditure on education services in prisons in England and Wales in the past five years was as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	16·9
1988-89	19·5
1989-90	22·9
1990-91	25·5
1991-92	29·5

Indictable Offences

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the number of indictable offences by age for the period 1987 to date.

Mr. Jack: The data available relates to the number of "known" offenders, that is, persons found guilty or cautioned. Information on indictable offences by age for the period 1987 to 1991 is included in table 6 of the Home Office statistical bulletin 30/92—"Cautions, court proceedings and sentencing, England and Wales, 1991", issued on 28 October 1992. A copy of the bulletin is in the Library. The 1991 data are provisional.

Firearms

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes involving the use of replica firearms have been committed in each police authority area in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Figures for offences involving imitation firearms are set out in the table. These figures include replica firearms and all other types of imitation firearms including toys.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police in which imitation firearms were reported to have been used

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will propose a review of police procedures with a view to reducing the number of shotguns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: New controls on shotguns were imposed by the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988. Since then, the number of shotgun certificates on issue has fallen by 18 per cent., from 882,000 in 1988 to 724,600 in 1991.

Shotgun certificates are issued by chief officers of police. Before granting each certificate, the chief officer must be satisfied that the applicant can be permitted to possess a shotgun without danger to public safety.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation to tighten gun control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 tightened the already strict controls on the possession of firearms and shot guns. The firearms consultative committee keeps the Firearms Acts under close review. It is open to the committee to recommend changes in the controls if it thinks fit.

Human Rights

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a timetable for the adoption of the European convention on human rights into domestic law.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We do not plan to incorporate the European convention on human rights into domestic law. We believe that it is for Parliament rather than the judiciary to determine how the principles of human rights in the convention are best secured.

Police (Housing)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of the 10 November, Official Report, column 690, if he will list by location how much revenue his Department expects to raise from each of the five police houses in south Yorkshire that have been identified as being put on the housing market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office will not receive any revenue from the sale of the five houses. The proceeds will accrue to the South Yorkshire police authority. No information about the location and potential value of the properties is held centrally.

Prisoner Escapes

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are now at large after escaping either from custody whilst travelling under escort or from places of detention.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Of those prisoners who have escaped from prison custody since 20 June 1988, either from prison establishments or whilst travelling under escort, 117 remain unlawfully at large, as at 24 November 1992.

Police Inspections

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each regional crime squad in England and Wales the dates on which it is projected that each shall next be inspected by Her Majesty's inspector of police.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The programme of inspections of regional crime squads is as follows:

Date of inspection	Number of regional crime squad
1992 1 to 3 December	No. 5
1993 15 to 17 February	No. 3
1993 8 to 10 March	No. 4
1993 11 to 13 May	No. 7
1993 10 to 12 August	No. 1

The programme of inspections after August 1993 has not yet been agreed.

Underground Facilities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much he estimates will be raised for the public Exchequer as a result of selling off underground facilities for use in wartime or emergency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is too soon to provide an estimate of the potential value of the four sites which are to be sold.

Parole Documents

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether persons sentenced to imprisonment before October shall have access, in accordance with the Criminal Justice Act 1992, to parole documentation which was written and submitted after October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no statutory requirement in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 for prisoners to have access to parole documentation. Prisoners sentenced before 1 October 1992 will continue to have their cases reviewed under the current arrangements by local review committees and the parole board until 30 September 1994. After that date, they will be reviewed in accordance with the new procedures applying to those sentenced on or after 1 October 1992 which, inter alia, provide for disclosure of dossiers considered by the parole board.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department will inform the British high commission in Islamabad of the outcome of their inquiries into an application by Mr. Shabir Ahmed, ref.: GV100/16328/TAH, who wishes to come to the United Kingdom as a priest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A letter from the British deputy high commissioner in Karachi referring Mr. Ahmed's application to the Home Office was received on 6 November. The immigration department wrote to the Nusrat-ul-Islam Mosque on 12 November seeking further information about Mr. Ahmed's proposed employment and are awaiting a reply. A decision will be taken as soon as the necessary enquiries have been completed.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those countries whose nationals are required to obtain a visa overseas prior to entering the United Kingdom; in what year the visa requirement was introduced in each of those countries; and for which countries a visa requirement has been withdrawn.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Visa requirements for the United Kingdom are set out in the appendix to the immigration rules—HC 251 as amended. The available information on the changes made to visa requirements is set out in the table.

Bosnian Nationals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when is he going to take a decision on the applications by Bosnian nationals, sponsored by the Leeds-based Alert organisation, who applied to enter the United Kingdom for medical treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It has been agreed to grant exceptionally and on compassionate grounds visas for two individuals to come to the United Kingdom to claim asylum and receive medical treatment. Six members of the families of these two will be allowed to accompany them. Sponsors have agreed to meet the cost of medical treatment.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what right of appeal is available to those Bosnian nationals, sponsored by the Leeds-based Alert organisation, whose applications to enter the United Kingdom, exceptionally, outside the immigration rules, have been refused; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: They may appeal to an adjudicator under section 13(2) of the Immigration Act 1971.

Welsh Police Authorities

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for amending the boundaries of the Welsh police authorities, pursuant to proposals for local government reorganisation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We are currently considering a range of issues concerning the future of the police service in England and Wales, including the boundaries of police force areas. We have yet to reach any firm conclusions.

Miscarriages of Justice

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter of 13 September from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth requesting details of his Department's approach and guidance on procedures for dealing with alleged miscarriages of justice.

Mr. Jack: I have written to the hon. Member today.

Probation

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of people who were released on parole and supervised by the probation service for the most convenient date in each of the years (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the numbers of prisoners granted parole is published annually in the report of the parole board—table 3 of the 1991 edition. For information for January to September 1992, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 11 November, Official Report, columns 780-81. Information on the numbers commencing parole supervision by the probation service and the numbers receiving such supervision on 31 December is published annually in a Home Office statistical bulletin—tables 1 and 2 of issue 26/92. Information for 1992 is not yet available. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Fire Authorities, Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the boundaries of fire authorities in Wales in the light of the proposed local government unitary authority boundaries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary will be considering the arrangements for the most effective provision of fire cover in Wales in the future in the light of proposals which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be bringing forward to change the structure of local government in Wales, and of advice from the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council.

Speeding Offences

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the law relating to speeding offences so that the number of penalty points reflects the seriousness of the offence.

Mr. Jack: No. Courts can award between three and six penalty points for exceeding the speed limit and are already required by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to pass a sentence which reflects the seriousness of the offence committed.

Emergency Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the total sum made available by central Government (i) in the current year and (ii) for the 1993-94 financial year for (a) fire services, (b) civil defence and (c) other emergency services in each county and metropolitan area in England and Wales;

(2) what is the total figure provided by central Government in each of the last 10 years for (a) fire services, (b) civil defence and (c) other emergency services in each county and metropolitan area in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 25 November 1992]: The Government do not pay specific grant for fire services. Central Government support is currently provided through the revenue support grant system in the form of redistributed business rates and revenue support grant. Prior to 1990 it was by means of rate support grant. These are intended to support each local authority's services collectively, and no part of them is assigned to any particular service. It is therefore not possible to provide details of the amount of Government financial support applied specifically to fire services.

The tables give details of grants paid by the Home Office to local authorities specifically in support of police and civil defence expenditure from 1982-83 to 1992-93. In addition, the proportion of police and civil defence expenditure not covered by Home Office grants will have received support through the rate or revenue support grant systems, although this cannot be quantified. Subject to parliamentary approval, 1993-94 provision for England and Wales is likely to be £3,060·3 million for police grants —current, capital, loan charges and special grants—and £20·2 million for civil defence grants—current and capital.

Interpretation Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what statutory obligation the probation services in England and Wales lie to provide interpretation services to clients of the service during interviews for pre-sentence reports or in any other appropriate circumstances.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 November 1992]: There are at present no statutory obligations on probation services in respect of interpretation. But national standards for the supervision of offenders in the community endorse the need to take reasonable steps to communicate effectively with, and understand offenders at all times.

Broncoscopy Facilities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the broncoscopy facilities available (a) in south Glamorgan and (b) in Wales; and what plans his Department has to curtail or reorganise those services.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have been asked to reply.

Broncoscopy facilities are available at the following hospitals—latest available centrally validated figures, as at 1990.

	Wales
South Glamorgan	University Hospital of Wales Cardiff Royal Infirmary Llandough Hospital Sully Hospital
Clwyd	Abergele Chest Hospital Ysbyty Glan Clwyd Maelor General Hospital Bronglais Hospital
East Dyfed	West Wales General Hospital Prince Phillip Hospital Llanelli General Hospital Bryntirion Hospital
Gwent	Nevill Hall Hospital Royal Gwent Hospital St. Woolos Hospital County Hospital Griffithstown
Gwynedd	Ysbyty Gwynedd Llandudno General Hospital
Mid Glamorgan	Bridgend General Hospital Princess of Wales Hospital East Glamorgan Hospital Prince Charles Hospital
Powys	Machynlleth Chest Hospital
West Glamorgan	Morriston Hospital Singleton Hospital Neath General Hospital

The provision of such services are matters for individual health authorities to determine based on local needs.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional secure places are to be provided for juvenile offenders by 1995; and what is the estimated cost of each place.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

Plans are being prepared to provide an additional 60-65 secure places in order to implement the new juvenile remand provisions in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 by the mid 1990s.

For planning purposes, the cost per place (including professional fees) has been estimated at £200,000. Actual costs will be dependent on a number of factors including size and location of the new accommodation, the competitiveness of the local construction industry, and the level of professional fees incurred. The aim will be to ensure that the design and development of the schemes represents good value for money.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Responsibility for the matter has been delegated to the Hydrographic Office under its chief executive Rear Admiral Myres. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Rear Admiral J. A. L. Myres to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 24 November 1992:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Defence for the cost to the public purse of the Chief Executive of the Hydrographic Office's visits to (a) Romania in June, (b) Russia in October 1992, and (c) Monaco in May.

The following were the costs of travel and subsistence for these visits:

Mr. Mark Thatcher

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all communications between his Department and Mr. Mark Thatcher concerning the defence and security exhibition in Bahrain on 11 May.

Mr. Aitken: It is not the practice for Government Departments to list communications with members of the public.

Harrier Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which companies bid for the contract to service Harrier aircraft at HMS Heron at Yeovilton.

Mr. Aitken: The following companies put forward bids for the contract to service Harrier aircraft at HMS Heron at Yeovilton: Airwork, British International Helicopters Ltd., Clarke Chapman Engineering Services, Field Aircraft Ltd., FR Aviation Ltd., Line Up Aviation Personnel, and Lovak Ltd.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which company has been awarded the contract for the servicing of Harrier aircraft at HMS Heron, Yeovilton.

Mr. Aitken: The contract for the servicing of Harrier aircraft at HMS Heron, Yeovilton, has been awarded to Field Aircraft Ltd.

Exports (Albania)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his policy towards the export of military equipment and technology to Albania.

Mr. Aitken: All exports of military equipment and technology are considered on a case-by-case basis. All relevant factors are taken into account. In the case of Albania, a major factor is that it remains a proscribed destination of the co-ordinating committee on multilateral strategic export controls (COCOM).

SCOTLAND

Health Budget

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the projected budget allocation (a) for each health board in Scotland and (b) in total for Scotland for the next three years.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend will soon be announcing the allocations he proposes to make to his various spending programmes, including the health programme.

The budget allocation for each health board is set annually. They have not yet been agreed for 1993-94, but once they are they will be announced in the usual way.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current numbers of staffed beds for (a) orthopaedic surgery, (b) general surgery and (c) general medicine at (i) Stracathro hospital, (ii) Arbroath infirmary and (iii) Tayside health board.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is shown in the table.

National Health Service

Average available staffed beds by selected specialty, quarter ending 30 June 1992

	(a) Orthopaedic surgery	(b) General surgery	(c) General medicine
(i) Stracathro hospital	47	34	71
(ii) Arbroath infirmary	—	—	26
(iii) Tayside health board	258	272	379

Health Board Funding

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the progress in implementing the move to parity of funding for Scottish health boards;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the funding implications for Scottish health boards of moving to parity of funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: There has been steady progress towards the fairer distribution of available resources to health boards in line with the population-based methodology set out in the Scottish health authorities revenue equalisation —SHARE—working party report. Latterly, allocations have been made to health boards as purchasers of services, based solely on weighted capitation of their resident populations using SHARE methodology as proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients", Cm. 555.

In the present financial year, allocations ranged from 3·99 per cent. above the parity target to 4·69 per cent. below, compared with 16 per cent. above and 34 per cent. below in 1977-78 when SHARE-based allocations were first introduced.

Further movement to parity is proposed, but is constrained by the effect that significant changes would have on the financial situation of individual health boards.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health and Social Services Trusts

9. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the way and the period of time that the consultation procedure was carried out over the proposals for health and social services trusts in Northern Ireland; and what representations he has received expressing concerns over the timing of the consultations.

Mr. Hanley: In both rounds to date the applications prepared by the units which aspired to trust status were issued widely for a period of public consultation which lasted for three months.

Of 61 respondents to the first round, one expressed concern as to the timing.

In the second round the corresponding figure was three out of a total of 271 respondents.

Security

11. Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the security situation in Northern Ireland.

14. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Since I answered a similar question on 29 October 1992 there have been 11 deaths as a result of the security situation in Northern Ireland, including nine civilians, one RUC officer and one soldier.

The Government continue to lend their full support to the security forces in their relentless efforts to bring those responsible for these heinous crimes to justice. To early November this year, 365 people have been charged with serious terrorist-type offences, including 94 with murder or attempted murder.

Select Committees (Evidence)

12. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions he, his Ministers and officials from the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments have given oral or written evidence to Select Committees since April 1989.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have not yet given evidence myself, but since April 1989 NIO Ministers have given oral evidence on three occasions and officials on 14 occasions. Written evidence has been submitted on 14 occasions.

Urban Development Grant

13. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he intends to extend urban development grant to urban areas outside Belfast and Londonderry.

Mr. Atkins: No. Urban development grant is targeted towards areas of greatest need and there are no plans to extend it to areas outside Belfast and Londonderry. The International Fund for Ireland operates a similar scheme called the urban development programme which promotes the rehabilitation, revitalisation and development of the commercial centre of towns and villages outside Belfast and Londonderry.

Terrorism (Security Services Involvement)

15. Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to investigate the involvement of members of the security services in terrorism following the conviction of Mr. Brian Nelson.

Mr. Mates: The investigation of any allegations of criminal conduct is a matter for the RUC.

Electricity Supply

16. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effect of completion of the Scottish interconnector to Northern Ireland on competition in electrical supply.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for developing competition in the supply of electricity rests with the Director of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland. In drawing up his proposals he will take account of the interconnector to Scotland which will offer access to a wide range of generation sources and to alternatively priced electricity.

25. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to announce the arrangements for the allocation of a further tranche of electricity generation.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for ordering new generating capacity rests with NIE plc. NIE is currently having discussions with the Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland and hopes to announce the start of the competition for new plant next year.

Examiner of Statutory Rules

17. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the present Examiner of Statutory Rules was appointed.

Mr. Mates: 1 July 1992.

Water Quality and Sewage Disposal

19. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his latest estimate of costs needed and time required to improve water quality and sewage disposal for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Drinking water quality and standards of sewage treatment are already high in Northern Ireland. Nevertheless, there is a need for continuing improvement. An enhanced programme of capital works is in hand to ensure that older water and sewage treatment works are modernised or replaced to ensure compliance with the latest standards. This programme will mean an increase in capital expenditure from the current level of £49 million in 1992-93 to a projected level of £80 million in 1995-96 and expenditure would remain at that level for the rest of the decade.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are his latest proposals to improve water quality and sewage disposal for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has a programme of capital works extending over the next 10 years to improve its water and sewerage infrastructure.

President-elect Clinton

20. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to meet representatives of the incoming Clinton administration to discuss matters relating to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present, but we look forward to establishing contact at an appropriate moment in the new year.

Children Order

21. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate when he hopes to publish the draft Children Order.

Mr. Hanley: Work is nearing completion on the preparation of a draft Children Order which will reform the law in Northern Ireland on the care and upbringing of children along the lines of the Children Act 1981. My noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, hopes to publish a proposal for a draft order for consultation early next year.

Electricity Charges

22. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the effect of charges for electricity in manufacturing industry on existing jobs and future job creation in high energy-consuming industries.

Mr. Atkins: The restructuring of the Northern Ireland electricity industry will bring increased efficiencies and greater competition leading to downward pressure on prices. This will improve the competitiveness of all Northern Ireland manufacturing industry which is the best means of securing existing employment and creating new jobs.

Water Privatisation

23. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding the privatisation of the water service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: There have been representations made by some 40 individuals or organisations.

Autumn Statement

24. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with representatives of the trade unions in Northern Ireland about the implications of the autumn statement on Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: I have not had any discussions with the trade unions in Northern Ireland about the autumn statement.

Intergovernmental Talks

26. Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with the Government of the Irish Republic and indicate what further plans he has to meet them.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I last met the Irish Government on 16 November 1992 at a meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference when we discussed the matters described in the joint statement issued after the meeting. I hope to have a further meeting with the Irish Government as soon as practicable after the Irish general election.

Trust Ports

27. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to complete the privatisation of the trust ports in the Province.

Mr. Atkins: It is expected that the draft Order in Council which will provide the necessary powers to enable any of Northern Ireland's trust ports to be privatised, will be laid before both Houses in the summer of 1993. It will become law two months from the date made.

The draft order will allow any Northern Ireland trust port authority to submit a privatisation scheme for approval and provide the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland with powers to initiate a scheme to privatise a trust port with a turnover of more than £5 million in at least two of the proceeding three years, if that port authority has not itself submitted such a scheme within two years of the enactment of the order.

Colin Wallace

28. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a response to the most recent representations he has received about the case of Colin Wallace.

Mr. Mates: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has received no representations.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: My hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Robert Atkins), Minister responsible for the economy and the environment.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what organisations are invited to nominate people to serve on the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland; how such nominees are chosen to serve; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Organisations were not asked to nominate individuals for membership of the health and social services boards which came into existence on 1 April 1991. The non-executive members on each board were appointed on the strength of their experience and for their particular abilities in various fields including management, personnel, finance and the voluntary sector and not as representatives of particular organisations.

Some of the members served on the boards prior to 31 March 1991 and their services were retained to provide the new boards with stability and continuity during the change over period.

Care Homes

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many residential care homes for fewer than four people are registered in Northern Ireland, in each of the health and social services boards areas.

Mr. Hanley: None.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional money will be included in the Northern Ireland budget provisions to provide for the additional key workers to be employed to ensure that the terms of the new Registered Homes (Northern Ireland) Order are fulfilled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: From 1 April 1993 the health and social services boards will, like, local authorities in England and Wales, employ "key workers" as part of their care management responsibilities. These arrangements will apply whether the client is living independently at home or in a residential care or nursing home setting, with the costs being met by the boards out of their community care budgets, which are being considerably enhanced from the 1993-94 financial year.

Neither the draft Registered Homes (Northern Ireland) Order nor the draft regulations to be made under that order contain provisions which require the employment of additional key workers by voluntary and private sector homes.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to whom the people to be employed at the proposed arm's-length unit for the inspection of registered homes in Northern Ireland will be responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Registration and inspection units were established in 1991 under the community care reforms. Responsibility for their organisation and management and for ensuring their independence from operational management lies with the area general manager of each health and social services board who is, in turn, directly accountable to his board for the functions and performance of the unit.

Each board has also established an advisory committee to provide a link between its registration and inspection unit and the public interest which it serves. Membership of the advisory committees is intended to reflect the scope of the units' activities and is drawn from the groups of service providers—such as private sector residential care or nursing home proprietors—with whom the units work.

General Practitioners

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average number of applications for vacancies for general practitioner's posts in Northern Ireland every year since 1989.

Mr. Hanley: The information is available only in respect of single handed-practice vacancies. Partnerships select their own candidates and information on these is not held centrally.

Year	Average number of applications
1989	34
1990	35
1991	36
1992	40

Housing Executive

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to increase the budget to the Housing Executive to meet housing needs in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The resources available to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for 1992-93 have recently been increased by £3 million to enable it to purchase dwellings for people in urgent need of housing. A further £1·3 million has been added mainly to cover the cost of bomb damage repairs to executive property. This means that the resources available to the executive for 1992-93 have been increased to approximately £490 million.

Lanark Way

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when it is proposed to reopen Lanark way for the convenience of the general public in their private and business interests in the pursuance of their lawful activities in commuting across the community divide.

Mr. Mates: The opening and closing of the Lanark way gates is an operational matter for the RUC, which must take into account the level of terrorist threat and the need to protect the community. I understand that although there are no current plans to reopen the gates, the RUC is keeping the situation under constant review.

Laganside Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the Treasury Minute on the first to eleventh reports from the Committee of Public Accounts 1992-93, paragraph 161, what proposals he has to change the auditing arrangements of the Laganside corporation.

Mr. Atkins: The audit arrangements for Langanside corporation are laid down in the Laganside Development (Northern Ireland) Order 1989. The legislation requires that the corporation's accounts be audited by an auditor to be appointed annually by the Department of the Environment. This arrangement has the approval of the Northern Ireland Audit Office which has the right under articles 8 and 9 of the Audit (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 to inspect the records of the corporation to ensure that the corporation is using its resources economically, efficiently and effectively.

In view of the Treasury minute on the first to eleventh reports from the Committee of Public Accounts 1992-93, paragraph 161, the Department will now take steps to provide the Audit Office with wider access to the books and records of Laganside corporation. This will be done through the financial memorandum which regulates the financial arrangements between the corporation and the Department.

Wildlife Incident Investigation Scheme

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (i) the total cost, adjusted to 1992 prices of the wildlife incident investigation scheme for Northern Ireland and (ii) the proportion of the total cost contributed by the agrochemical industry levy, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: An overall costing for the Departments involved in the operation of the scheme is not available.

Diagnostic services carried out by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland in 1991-92 were costed at £14,824. This amount was recouped by means of the agrochemical levy. Prior to 1991-92 diagnostic testing was financed by DANI.

WALES

Conservation Sites

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many road development plans currently mentioned within local authority structural plans in Wales threaten special protection areas and Ramsar sites; and if he will list the proposed developments and the sites involved;

(2) if he will list the local authority development plans which currently pose (a) one and (b) two or more threats to Ramsar sites and special protection areas in Wales; and if he will list the sites affected.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The only proposal in a county structure plan in Wales which crosses part of a designated special protection area, which is also a Ramsar site, is the Shotton to Connah's Quay bypass, a non-trunk road scheme on the A548, identified in the approved Clwyd structure plan. This will involve a new crossing of the Dee estuary. There are no proposals in approved local plans in Wales for development on areas within a designated special protection area or Ramsar site.

Young Farmers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce measures to encourage young farmers to (a) convert redundant farm buildings to housing and (b) to build new homes near to their holdings.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Our rural housing reserve offers local authorities the opportunity to address a range of priority social housing needs.

Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to issue new guidelines to local authorities in Wales on (a) housing needs assessment research and (b) the development of housing needs strategies.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to establish an agency to co-ordinate housing needs research and the development of localised housing needs assessment plans in Wales, with the responsibility for providing guidelines and funding for such localised initiatives.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) nature conservation review sites and (b) national nature reserves there are in Wales; and if he will list the nature conservation review sites which have been created as national nature reserves in Wales in each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers of nature conservation review sites and national nature reserves in Wales are 111 and 49 respectively. The nature conservation review sites which have been declared as national nature reserves within the last five years are as follows:

Year	Declared as national nature reserve
1988	Coed y Cerrig
1989	None
1990	Kenfig
1991	Coedmor Corsydd Llangloffan Crymlyn Bog (Extension)
1992	Coed Rheidol (Extension) Cors Caron (Extension) Dyfi (Extension) Rhos Llawr-Cwrt (Extension)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase available funding to nature conservation review sites for the maintenance of the sites of special scientific interest network and their effective monitoring.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Countryside Council for Wales, which has statutory responsibility for these activities, determines the amount of resources to be allocated to each of its programmes within its overall budget. Decisions on the future funding of the council will be announced shortly.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to set a target of transferring at least 10 nature conservation review sites into national nature reserves per annum.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. The responsibility for declaring national nature reserves in Wales rests with the Countryside Council for Wales. The rate of progress depends on the funds available and the willingness of site owners to enter into the required commitments.

Smoke Control Orders

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many smoke control orders were in force in Wales, what area was covered in thousands of hectares and how many premises were affected in (i) 1980, (ii) 1985 and (iii) 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of smoke control orders in force in Wales is not held centrally. However, Welsh Office records indicate that 37 such orders were introduced in Wales in the period 1960-1988, covering over 1,500 hectares and more than 24,000 premises. No new orders have been made since 1988.

Dentistry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of whether discharges of mercury from dental surgeries pose an environmental risk.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All persons charged with the maintenance and operation of dental surgeries are covered by the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988, as amended. On the basis of an international standard specification, dental practices are required to install units to extract solid amalgam for recycling.

The Health and Safety Executive has inspectorial rights generally, and family health service authorities have the right of access to premises where general dental services are provided, to confirm appropriate standards of provision.

There is no evidence to suggest that free metallic mercury from dental practices is presenting a significant hazard to the environment. The use of capsulated materials prevents the release of mercury vapour or liquid into the environment.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by family health service authority area the general dental practitioners who are now de-registering national health services patients.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not held centrally. I am aware that some de-registration is taking place in all authority areas, for a variety of reasons. Nevertheless, the overall number of NHS registrations in Wales continues to rise, and stood at 58·5 per cent. of the population as at 30 September 1992. This is a higher proportion than health departments or the profession anticipated at this stage of the contract.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many new patients have been registered with dentists in Wales in each of the last three years; and how many were (a) children receiving NHS treatment, (b) children receiving non-NHS treatment, (c) adults receiving non-NHS treatment, (d) adults receiving NHS treatment but not entitled to exemption payments and (e) adults receiving NHS dental treatment and receiving exemption payment;

(2) how many dentists have been operational in Wales in each of the last three years; and what are (a) the total numbers of (i) NHS and (ii) non-NHS children treated in each year and (b) the total numbers of (1) NHS and (2) non-NHS adult patients treated.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of dental practitioners who were in contract with family health services authorities in Wales in each of the past three years is as follows:

As at 1 October 1990 : 837
As at 1 October 1991 : 832
As at 30 June 1992 : 844

Information is not held centrally on non-NHS treatment.

Information on the number of patients receiving NHS treatment is not available, however the number of patients registered with a GDP in Wales is as follows:

	Children	Adults
As at 30 September 1991	388,495	891,380
As at 30 September 1992	416,308	1,270,178

Since the introduction of the new contract in October 1990, information is not available centrally on the number of NHS courses of treatment undergone by children as treatment for children is now paid for on a capitation basis. The number of NHS courses of treatment undergone by adults in Wales in 1991-92 was 1,342,273. Of these 74·8 per cent. had a patient charge and 25·2 per cent. had remission or exemption of charges. As charges and remission/exemption are for a particular course of treatment, it is not possible to say how many people these figures relate to.

Public Appointments

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will reconsider his policy of appointing the same person to more than one public body in Wales, especially when the posts are paid.

Mr. David Hunt: No, all public appointments will continue to be made on the basis of aptitude and merit.

South Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what procedures he will follow in filling the vacancy on the board of the South Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 24 November, at column 633.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the names of chairmen-elect of the second-wave NHS trusts.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: An announcement was made on 23 November.

National Nature Reserves

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total amount of funding granted to national nature reserves by his Department in each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Prior to 1 April 1991, this was the responsibility of the Nature Conservancy Council and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate costs. Funding made available by the Countryside Council for Wales for National Nature Reserves in 1991-92 was as follows:

	1991-92 £
Acquisition costs	820,393
Management costs	1,032,097
Totals	1,852,490

These figures include expenditure on marine nature reserves.

Treatment Centres

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by how much West Glamorgan health authority will increase its use of the treatment centre at Bridgend, and the treatment centre in Bangor, in accordance with his decision letter on the future provision of night-time casualty services in west Glamorgan of 29 October.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The use of these treatment centres, beyond that level centrally funded by the Welsh Office, is a matter for each health authority to negotiate directly with the centres.

Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing concentration rates of (a) sulphur dioxide, (b) black smoke and (c) nitrogen oxides at each monitoring site in Wales in each year since 1976; and what was the corresponding EC limit value in each case.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Figures showing the concentration rates of sulphur dioxide and black smoke at urban and rural air monitoring sites in Wales are on pages 98 and 99 of the "Environmental Digest for Wales No. 6 1991", copies of which are held in the Library of the House. Tables giving EC directive limit and guide values for smoke and sulphur dioxide are at page 97.

Nitrogen oxides have been monitored continuously since 1987, but no specific figures are available for Wales. However, the "Survey of Nitrogen Dioxide concentrations in the United Kingdom Using Diffusion Tubes, 1991", a copy of which is also in the Library of the House, indicates that, on the basis of the monitoring undertaken, nitrogen dioxide levels in Wales are below recommended EC directive limits.

Education Bill

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place the results of consultation on the Education Bill in the Library.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. Such correspondence is a private matter between the individual and the Department. It is nevertheless open to those who responded to make their comments public and indeed, some organisations have already done so.

Deeside Industrial Park

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement concerning planning applications by the Welsh Development Agency and Alyn and Deeside district council to extend Deeside industrial park;

(2) when he expects to rule upon applications to extend Deeside industrial park.

Mr. David Hunt: My hon. Friend the Minister of State called in the planning application for proposed business and industrial development on land north of Shotwick road, Deeside because it raises planning issues of more than local importance. A decision on the application will be issued as soon as possible after the inspector's report has been received following a public local inquiry.

Car Journeys

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of car journeys in Wales were for distances of 5 miles or less for the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The 1985-86 national travel survey —the latest for which results are available for Wales— found that 65 per cent. of car journeys in Wales covered distances of 5 miles or less.

Bed and Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each local authority in Wales (a) the number of young people between the ages of 15 and 17 years who have been placed in bed and breakfast accommodation in the latest year for which figures are available and (b) the cost of such placements.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide figures for the number of properties in council ownership in Wales, by authority, that have smoke alarms fitted.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Transport Efficiency

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the relative efficiency in Wales in terms of megajoules per passenger kilometre of (a) cars in urban areas, (b) cars in rural areas, (c) taxis, (d) buses, (e) motor cycles and (f) British Rail trains.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally. Figures on United Kingdom energy consumption by transport mode are given in "Transport Statistics: Great Britain 1992", a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the bus routes which have ceased to operate since the implementation of the bus deregulation proposals in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Agricultural Tenancy Law

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will propose measures to facilitate the introduction of retirement tenancies as part of reforms of agricultural tenancy law.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government's proposals for reform of agricultural tenancy law would give landlords and tenants the freedom to agree the period of tenancy which was suited to their particular needs. The parties would be able to take account of all factors in deciding the appropriate period including any retirement plans of the tenant.

Seven-year-olds (Testing)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to increase funding for rural schools in Wales in light of his proposal to introduce mandatory testing for seven-year-olds; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Statutory testing of seven-year-olds has been in place since the summer term 1991. Rural schools benefit from the significant levels of support already being made for assessment. Test material and related teacher guidance is issued free of charge to all participating schools. Additionally £2·5 million was approved in 1992-93 under the grants for education support and training arrangements for providing teachers with assessment skills and for local education authority support.

Community Care

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified nurses are currently employed in care in the community in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally.

Hydroelectric Scheme

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the possible environmental impact of the proposed hydroelectric scheme on the Afon Conwy; if he will establish a public inquiry into the proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The environmental impact of the proposed hydroelectric scheme on the Afon Conwy will be considered by the local planning authority during the determination of the planning application and by the National Rivers Authority when considering the necessary application for an abstraction licence.

We will consider fully the hon. and learned Gentleman's request that there be a public inquiry into the proposal and I will write to him when a decision is taken.

Canada Geese

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to prevent agricultural damage in Wales caused by Canada geese; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in Wales provides guidance to farmers on various methods of controlling Canada geese. Farmers suffering agricultural damage from Canada geese can control these birds during the open season by legal methods which include shooting or deploying scaring techniques. During the close season, which runs from 21 February to 31 August, licences to shoot Canada geese are available from the Welsh Office, provided applicants can demonstrate the need to prevent serious agricultural damage.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Canada geese were estimated to be inhabiting Wales in 1970, 1980, 1990 and 1992; what is the estimated agricultural damage these geese have caused since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not collected centrally. There have been reported increases in the numbers of Canada geese in recent years. Various measures to control them are available to the farming industry.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the recent investigation of the accounts of the Welsh Development Agency, in particular severance payments made to departing staff.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department and the agency are studying the findings of the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Craig y Nos Castle

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to increase the funding for Craig y Nos castle; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The importance of Craig y Nos castle and its related theatre is recognised. The castle is listed as a building of special architectural or historical importance at grade II and the theatre at grade I.

On the basis of advice from the Historic Buildings Council for Wales, we have made available a grant of £22,500 for works to the theatre. Part of this grant has been claimed but we have not received further requests for assistance. If a further application for assistance with conservation work to the structure is received, we shall consider it as soon as possible.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to increase the funding for the architectural heritage of Powys; what proposals he has to increase funding for the upkeep of buildings of special architectural interest; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Funding for the architectural heritage is allocated according to the needs of individual structures rather than geographically. We are guided in this by the Historic Buildings Council for Wales and substantial grants have been made on its advice to properties such as Powis castle. I will shortly decide on the allocation of resources to individual programmes for future years under the normal arrangements.

However, considerable financial support to the built heritage is provided through maintenance and restoration of the properties in the care of the state. The estate in care is administered by Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments. Examples of such support are the development of a new car park, interpretative panels and ongoing conservation works at Montgomery castle in Powys.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to clean up beaches in Wales that have banned swimming due to pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has agreed with Dwr Cymru, as a first priority, a programme of improvement works to bathing waters in Wales designated under the terms of the EC bathing waters directive which presently fail or are at risk of failing to meet the bacteriological standards of the directive. I am not aware of bathing having been banned at any of those locations. Once this improvement programme has been completed, it will be for the National Rivers Authority to agree priorities with Dwr Cymru about improvement work remaining to be done.

Chest Medical Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in South Glamorgan which provide chest medical services and to provide a table showing the number of beds available (a) in each of those hospitals in each of the past five years, (b) currently and (c) projected for 1992-93.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information for the latest five years, which relates to the number of beds in the specialty of thoracic medicine, is given as follows:

Average daily available beds

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Llandough	52·6	54·4	55·1	54·5	56·5
Sully	47·8	44·4	49·8	49·2	29·0

Comparable information for 1992-93 is not available centrally. The South Glamorgan health plan, however, states that activity for thoracic medicine will remain constant.

Hamilton Oil plc

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the result of the public inquiry into the application by Hamilton Oil plc with regard to developments at Talacre, Clwyd.

Sir Wyn Roberts: As soon as possible.

Sully Hospital

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what proposals he has received regarding the future of X-ray facilities at Sully hospital;

(2) if he will make it his policy that any proposals for the closure or reduction of X-ray services at Sully hospital should be subject to formal consultation processes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. Any proposals which represent a substantial change in the provision of these services will be subject to the normal consultation procedure.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what procedures of consultation were followed prior to the temporary closure of Powys ward at Sully hospital; and when it is planned to reopen Powys at Sully hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Temporary closures are a matter for local management and do not require formal consultation. The reopening of this ward is a matter for the health authority at this stage.

Further Education

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman-elect of the Welsh Further Education Council concerning the (a) funding, (b) start date and (c) course provision at the proposed new further education college extension at Lockwith, Cardiff.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I met Mr. Malcolm Wallace, chairman of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales, on 23 October to discuss a number of issues, including the funds which will be available to the council in 1993-94. I also met Councillor P. Perkins, chairman of the education committee for South Glamorgan on 26 June to discuss the future of further education courses in the Cardiff area.

Responsibility for planning further education courses in the Cardiff area rests with South Glamorgan county council until 31 March 1993, after which the responsibility transfers to the Further Education Funding Council for Wales. The director of Education for South Glamorgan wrote to the Welsh Office on 12 October with certain proposals regarding the establishment of further education facilities at Leckwith. This has been drawn to the attention of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales. it will be for the council to determine its own expenditure priorities for 1993-94 when it is informed of the funding available to it.

I understand that the funding council is currently considering the pattern of provision for further education in Cardiff in the light of the letter from the director of education.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what proposals he has for the alignment of (a) purchaser, (b) directly manager provider units and (c) trusts with the boundaries of the proposed unitary authorities under local government reorganisation;

(2) what proposals he has to align the boundaries of the three emergency services; if he will institute a study into the costs and benefits of such multi-purpose alignments; and if he will make a statement on the implications of local government re-organisation on the emergency services;

(3) what provisions he has made to compensate local government officers for any reduction in pay following their transfer to unitary local authorities after local government reorganisation.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall be announcing decisions on matters relating to local government reorganisation in due course.

Croft Nursery School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the Croft nursery school, Aston, Deeside; and if he will make a statement on the future of the school.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I has any plans at present to do so. The county council has published a notice proposing to close the school. If there are statutory objections, the decision is one for my right hon. Friend.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the proposed Gwent-South Glamorgan-Powys Ambulance Trust will provide the ambulance service for the Rhymney Valley or any part of it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The application for national health service trust status made clear the intention to provide ambulance services for the health authority areas of Gwent, Powys and South Glamorgan. Detailed operations from 1 April 1993 when the South and East Wales Ambulance National Health Service Trust commences formal operation will depend on the contracts negotiated with the purchasers of the ambulance service. However, I would not expect the trust or any other ambulance service in Wales to discontinue the existing practice of operating within the margins of neighbouring health authority areas, especially when responding to emergency calls and any local arrangements to meet the needs of patients.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales at what level he proposes to set the total revenue support grant to Welsh local authorities in 1993-94; and if he will announce his decision on council tax transitional relief.

Mr. David Hunt: As I announced in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans) on 12 November at columns 890-91, I propose a level of aggregate external finance—AEF—for 1993-94 in support of local authority spending in Wales of £2,342·6 million. AEF has three components: the distributable amount of non-domestic rates, the total of relevant specific and supplementary grants and revenue support grant.

I intend to specify that the distributable amount from the non-domestic rating account should be £470·2 million on the basis that the Welsh national non-domestic rating multiplier for 1993-94 will be 44. I propose that relevant specific and supplementary grants towards local authority revenue expenditure should total £204·6 million.

I further propose that the total of revenue support grant should be £1,667·8 million of which £1,666·7 million should be paid to Welsh county and district councils and £1·1 million to certain specified bodies.

My officials are today writing to Welsh local authorities setting out my proposals for the component amounts of AEF and inviting their views. I am placing a copy of that consultation letter, which details the relevant specific and supplementary grants and the amounts to be paid to specified bodies, in the Library of the House.

If local authorities spend in line with the plans that I announced on 12 November they should be able to set council tax for a band C property of £232, which is £34 a year less than the average community charge payable by two adults for the current year, after taking into account relief through the community charge reduction scheme. It is also £95 less than the average domestic rates bill per ratepayer in Wales for 1989-90. The level of council tax local authorities set will depend on their budget decisions for 1993-94 and council tax standard spending can only be indicative, but I will use my capping powers, if necessary, to ensure that authorities set reasonable levels of tax. I will be announcing my proposals on capping shortly.

Around two thirds of properties in Wales fall in valuation bands A to C. Almost half of properties fall in bands A and B and their council tax bills should be proportionately less than £232. Single adult households will be entitled to a 25 per cent. discount and people on low incomes can qualify for council tax benefit. Those in receipt of income support will pay no council tax at all.

I have given careful consideration to the need to provide transitional relief for the introduction of the council tax, but I have come to the view that a transitional scheme cannot be justified.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) the total current cost and (b) the average cost per applicant within each local authority in Wales for administering (i) housing benefit and (ii) community charge benefit; and what are the estimated total costs per local authority for administering such benefits following the introduction of competitive tendering into housing benefit administration.

Mr. Burt: I have been asked to reply.

The table shows the total costs to central Government of subsidising the administration of the housing benefit and community charge benefit schemes for each local authority in Wales and the average administrative cost per benefit applicant. This Department pays 50 per cent. of authorities' total estimated costs by way of a direct grant. The balance of expenditure not subsidised by specific grant is reflected in the revenue support grant arrangements which are the responsibility of the Welsh Office. The exception to this is the Development Board of Rural Wales which receives 100 per cent. direct subsidy from this Department.

We are not aware that any local authority in Wales has contracted out activities connected with the administration of housing benefit.

The caseloads used in the calculation of the average amounts, are the averages of the four quarters (May 1991 to February 1992) figures as reported by local authorities. Estimates, based on average movements in national caseloads, have been included where authorities have not provided the necessary information.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the percentage of people in Britain who were living on or below the supplementary benefit level in (a) 1979, (b) 1987 and (c) 1990.

Mr. Burt: The Department no longer produces estimates of this kind, following the recommendations of the technical review of low income statistics in March 1988. A copy of this report can be found in the Library. Information for 1987 and 1990 is therefore not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. Estimates for 1979 were published in "Low Income Families—1979", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the effects of the Child Support Act 1991 on the number of families entitled to (a) family credit and (b) income support distinguishing between lone-parent families and the families paying maintenance.

Mr. Burt: We estimate that in the long run increased payments of child maintenance under the Child Support Act will result in some 60,000 to 80,000 lone parents moving off income support. It is expected that the majority of these will move on to family credit. Of lone parents already on family credit, we estimate that around 10,000 will move off this benefit. These estimates are based on 1987-88-89 family expenditure survey data.

The entitlement to income support of absent parents with families living with them will not be affected. The family expenditure survey does not contain information on absent parents and therefore it is not possible to say how their entitlement to family credit will be affected by policy changes.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any areas for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April;

(2) if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April;

(3) which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Miss Widdecombe: My noble Friend, Lord Henley, is responsible for the oversight of deregulation within the Department of Social Security.

The potential impact on business and members of the public is taken into account in assessing any proposals for changes in policy and procedure. Moreover, the scope for deregulation and simplification is kept under constant review in the Department.

From April 1992 two changes have been made to the way normal earnings are assessed and verified in family credit making it easier and less time consuming for employers to provide earnings information. The Contributions Agency has a number of initiatives in hand to improve procedures affecting business and to help them towards a better understanding of the National Insurance scheme. A review has been completed of the definitions of earnings for PAYE and national insurance purposes, and its recommendations for simplifying the rules will be implemented from the start of the new tax year, 6 April 1993. Other items currently under review include the frequency with which some people need to renew their NI "exception" certificates, and certain procedures affecting people working abroad.

Since the last general election the Department has laid or made the regulations set out in the tables. Most of these are amendment or technical regulations which do not increase the total regulatory burden or business or the public.

Unemployed Blind People

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he intends to amend the actively seeking work rules for unemployed blind people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today laid regulations before Parliament which will help unemployed blind people who wish to undertake a training course in the use of a guide dog. Such courses significantly improve the employment prospects of blind people. The effect of the regulations will be to remove an anomaly in the actively seeking work rules which might have deterred some blind people from undertaking training. In particular, blind people who have taken a holiday for up to two weeks earlier in the year will, when the regulations come into effect on 17 December, be free to undertake a course without the risk of a benefit sanction.

Disability Working Allowance

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been received to date for the new disability working allowance; and how many of these have been approved for payment.

Mr. Scott: By 20 November 1992 the number of claims for disability working allowance received was 22,833 and the number of awards made was 2,938.

War Pensions

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases involving injury as a result of the mustard gas explosion in Bari harbour, Italy, in 1943 have been dealt with by his Department in each year since 1980; how many cases have resulted in war pensions being paid; how these pensions have been calculated; and what representations he has had to backdate payments to the period before 1986.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 4 February 1991 at column 63 and my reply of 14 February 1991, at columns 586-87. Records of claims for war pension as a result of the Bari harbour incident have not been kept since the special tracing exercise conducted in 1986-87 and the statistical information now requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

War pensions are calculated by reference to the degree of disablement due to service assessed by making a comparison between the condition of the ex-service men or women and the condition of a normal healthy person of the same age and sex.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the application by Mr. Peter Lynch for his renewal of mobility allowance sent in on 17 June is to be dealt with; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of mobility allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Bob Cryer, dated 25 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking when the application by Mr. Peter Lynch for his renewal of Mobility Allowance (MobA) will be dealt with.

I should explain that a decision has now been made on Mr. Lynch's claim and this has been notified to him. I have replied to you separately in greater detail about this.

Clearly this case has not been handled with the efficiency I would expect and I offer my sincere apologies for the distress and inconvenience caused to your constituent. My letter of 19 October to all MPs explained the problems the Agency has faced since the introduction of Disability Living Allowance in April 1992, which replaced MobA and Attendance Allowance for those whose disabilities began before age 65, and set out the measures we have taken to resolve these problems successfully.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Romanian Adoptions

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for health (1) what her Department is doing to renegotiate the age limitation of 35 years with the Romanian adoption committee;

(2) if she will make a statement on the current state of negotiations with the Romanian adoption committee about adoption from Romania.

Mr. Yeo: The agreement between the Romanian Committee for Adoptions and the United Kingdom will be reviewed in the new year. Age limitation will be among the issues to be discussed.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many couples are on her Department's approved list for adoption from Romania; and how many of these couples have become ineligible because of the terms of the agreement with the Romanian adoption committee;

(2) if she will bring forward proposals to refund payments for approved home studies by couples who have become ineligible for adoption because of the terms of agreement with the Romanian adoption committee.

Mr. Yeo: Twenty one couples resident in England have been given approval to adopt children from Romania. Sixty-five couples, resident in the United Kingdom, were advised that they were ineligible following the agreement signed on 19 March 1992. The question of repayment for home study reports carried out for unsuccessful applicants is a matter for individual local authorities.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State Health (1) what action is now being taken to facilitate the adoption of named children from Romania;

(2) how many children were adopted into the United Kingdom from Romania (a) in 1990, (b) in 1991 and (c) since the signing of the agreement with the Romanian adoption committee.

Mr. Yeo: In 1990, a total of 13 children from Romania were granted entry clearance approval with an understanding that adoption proceedings would be undertaken in the United Kingdom. In 1991 there were 215 and in 1992 there were four such approvals. No children have as yet been admitted under the agreement procedures.

We have asked our ambassador in Bucharest to raise with the Romanian Government our concerns about the delays experienced in processing adoption applications of United Kingdom citizens.

NHS Targets

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 910, when baseline data for severe mental illness, gonorrhoea, under-16 conceptions and accidents for regional and district health targets will be ready.

Dr. Mawhinney: A supplement to the common data set was published in October. This provided baseline data for all the key areas in the White Paper except for suicide rates for the severely mentally ill and gonorrhoea. The latter are not routinely collected for local populations. The Department is working with the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on the feasibility of collecting the information on severe mental illness. Data about the incidence of gonorrhoea are not available by area of incidence. The Department is however examining the data aggregated by National Health Service regions in which clinics are situated to see whether they lend themselves to use for target setting at this level. A copy of the guide to the data file is in the Library.

Seasonal Affective Disorder

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has undertaken on the incidence of seasonal affective disorder; and what proposals she has to reduce its incidence.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has undertaken no research into this disorder and has no plans to do so.

European Year of Older People

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer of 13 July, Official Report, columns 430-31, on the European year of the elderly, if she will outline her plans to focus on the housing needs of the elderly.

Mr. Yeo: My Department, in co-operation with the Department of Social Security, has overall co-ordinating responsibility for the European Year of Older People in the United Kingdom and we are now well advanced with our plans. The task group concerned with problems of housing, isolation and loneliness, information needs, transport and community care issues—social and environmental integration—has put forward a number of proposals to mark the year in the United Kingdom including: national conferences on social and environmental integration to be held in April and December 1993 together with local events and exhibitions throughout the year focusing on issues of housing, transport, community care and communications; a European tenant exchanges scheme to give older people a wider knowledge of what is, or might be, available to them in sheltered housing; a study by Anchor housing trust entitled "Available Options", a review of the developments in public policy in the areas of housing, care, income and savings for older people.

The Department of the Environment will also be issuing a revised edition of their publication "Your Home in Retirement—Housing Advice for Older People".

Drugs

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what categories of drugs are currently on the limited list; and what proposals she has for adding to the list.

Dr. Mawhinney: The limited list applies to drugs which may be prescribed only in specified circumstances and currently contains five items. These are Acetylcysteine Granules, Carbocisteine, Clobazam, Cynocobalamin and Pregnavite Forte F.

The selected list scheme applies to categories of drugs from which only a selected number of products can be prescribed under the National Health Service. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 12 November, the scheme is to be extended from the current seven categories to include a further 10 categories.

The current categories are:

Analgesics for mild to moderate pain
Indigestion remedies
Laxatives
Cough and cold remedies
Vitamins
Tonics
Benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers.

The new categories are:

Anti-diarrhoeal drugs
Drugs for allergic disorders
Hypnotics and anxiolytics
Appetite suppressants
Drugs for vaginal and vulval conditions
Contraceptives
Drugs used in anaemia
Topical antirheumatics
Drugs acting on the ear and nose
Drugs acting on the skin.

In making the regulations required to bring particular drugs within the scope of the limited list and selected list arrangements, my right hon. Friend will continue to act on the advice of the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will place in the Library copies of the evaluation report on her Department's recent public awareness campaign on solvent abuse.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have today placed a copy of the report "Research into Parents' Attitudes to Drugs and Solvents" in the Library.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what annual capital guidelines and supplementary credit approvals she is making available for the personal social services for 1993-94.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Annual capital guidelines of £122·5 million will be available for 1993-94, a real terms increase of 6·5 per cent. Supplementary credit approvals will again be available for mental illness—£10·5 million —information technology for community care—£10·2 million—and AIDS/HIV services—£3 million. In addition, local authorities will be able to use certain receipts from the sale of capital assets including additional receipts available because of the relaxation of the rules on the use of capital receipts announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 12 November.

Independent Living Fund

Mr Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources will be provided for local authorities as a consequence of the changes to the independent living fund announced on 24 November.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In addition to the £539 million I announced on 2 October for the community care special transitional grant, we have decided to allocate extra resources to local authorities to enable them to play a full part in meeting the needs of severely disabled people. I am therefore increasing the community care special transitional grant by over £26 million to £565 million in 1993-94. In 1994-95, the grant will be increased by £64 million to £716 million, and in 1995-96 it will rise by £100 million to £618 million. The detailed arrangements and distribution of the resources will be discussed with the local authority associations.

Pharmaceutical Investment

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for health (1) what assessment her Department has made of the likely effect of the proposed extension of the limited list on medical research investment by United Kingdom-based pharmaceutical companies;

(2) what assessment her Department has made of the likely effect of the proposed extension of the limited list on the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry's international competitiveness;

(3) what assessment her Department has made of the likely effect of the proposed extension of the limited list on attracting new inward investment in the United Kingdom pharmaceutical research and production.

Dr. Mawhinney: The selected list scheme provides that particular drugs may not be prescribed under the national health service where there are effective alternatives available at lower cost. It mirrors measures being taken throughout Europe to limit rapidly rising drugs bills. The relative competitiveness of the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry and decisions on investment in medical and pharmaceutical research and production depend on many factors in both the United Kingdom and other key pharmaceutical markets. It is not possible to identify specifically the impact of the proposed extension of the selected list arrangement separately from that of other changes in both the United Kingdom and other countries.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the likely effect of the proposed extension of the limited list on employment in the research-based sector of the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry.

Dr. Mawhinney: Following my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's announcement on 12 November, the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs will make recommendations about which products within the additional therapeutic categories may not be prescribed under the NHS. The companies concerned may wish to make representations to the committee before it makes its final recommendations. Until decisions on the individual products have been taken, it is not possible to assess whether there will be any effect on employment in the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry.

Chemical Entity Medicines

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many product licences for innovative new chemical entity medicines have been granted by the Medicines Control Agency in the seven therapeutic categories currently covered by the original limited list regulations since 1985.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on product licences granted by the United Kingdom licensing authority is as follows:

	Number
Indigestion remedies	1
Laxatives	1
Vitamins	1

Tomlinson Report

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy, in her decisions on the Tomlinson report, to require that no beds will be closed in London before steps are taken to improve community health services.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have made clear that the Government's response to the Tomlinson report will be made early in the new year. Clearly a key element will be to ensure that the shift in the balance of care from acute to primary and community health services is carefully planned and co-ordinated.

Interleukin-6

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to her answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 942, what requests have now been made to Coopers and Lybrand in connection with the interleukin-6 research project; if she will make it her policy to publish the result of reports from auditors into the interleukin-6 project; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will ensure that any inquiry carried out on behalf of United Leeds Teaching Hospitals Trust into the interleukin-6 research project should take evidence from all relevant witnesses; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand that the United Leeds Teaching Hospitals National Health Service Trust has no plans to institute a formal inquiry into the interleukin-6 research project which is primarily a matter for the university of Leeds.

At no time have the auditors employed by the United Leeds teaching hospitals national health service trust or the then Leeds Western health authority made a report in connection with the interleukin-6 research project. However the trust has now asked Coopers and Lybrand to look at the feasibility of estimating any possible loss to the NHS of the interleukin-6 research project.

Heartstart 3000 Machine

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigations have taken place into the Heartstart 3000 machine used by emergency ambulance crews; how effective this equipment is; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has conducted a three-day comparative trial using a front line ambulance and defibrillators from four manufacturers. The ambulance was driven around a set course, over rough ground, along motorways and past power stations, and the ecg recordings were compared. The Laerdal Heartstart 3000 was entirely satisfactory, as were all the others.

In addition to the trial described, a full technical evaluation has also been carried out. The equipment was found to be satisfactory.

Newcastle General Hospital

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what weight she gave to the amount of provision for (a) general medical, (b) surgical, (c) paediatric and (d) geriatric beds at Newcastle general hospital in her decision to turn down its application for trust status; and what assessment was made of the relative cost per bed of alternative local provision.

Dr. Mawhinney: Newcastle general hospital applied for National Health Service trust status in 1990. In assessing that application the then Secretary of State for Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) considered the views expressed in public consultation and the advice of independent financial management consultants. The pattern of service provision is primarily a matter for the local district health authority, as the main puchaser of health services for the local population.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations her Department has initiated between the regional health authority, the management and senior clinicians at Newcastle general hospital, the Comunity Health Council and local general practitioners concerning the future of Newcastle general hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East can expect a reply or acknowledgement to his letter dated 26 October, about Newcastle general hospital.

Mr. Sackville: An acknowledgment was sent on 5 November, the day following receipt of the letter. I sent a full reply on 24 November.

Relate

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to increase funding to the Relate marriage guidance organisation.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that there can be no automatic assurance for Relate or any other marriage guidance organisation which the Home Office funds about the future level of support.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Aircraft Industry

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people were employed in the aircraft industry in (a) 1980 and (b) 1991.

Mr. Sainsbury: The annual census of production shows UK aerospace employment in 1980 as 198,300 and the provisional figures for 1991, which may be subject to revision at a later date, as 166,000.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 4 November, Official Report, column 310, how many individuals from the firms listed by him are currently on secondment to his Department.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Department currently has two secondees from one of the firms listed in the answer given on 4 November. A further three secondees are from two firms the predecessors of which are listed in the answer.

Timber

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the timber imported from the Philippines is categorised as (a) rough sawn and raw logs and (b) semi-manufactured; what criteria his Department uses to make such categorisations; what differences there are between United Kingdom criteria and Philippine criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Rough-sawn and raw logs accounted for 1.3 per cent of total timber imports from the Philippines in 1991. Semi-manufactured timber accounted for 98.7 per cent. of imports over the same period.

The United Kingdom statistics follow the United Nations' standard international trade classification system which is also used by the Philippines.

Companies House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list which directors of private companies act as advisers to Companies House.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Companies House steering board advises on strategic priorities for Companies House. Its full membership was set out in the 1991-92 annual report and accounts, which has been laid before the House. The private sector members are:

Mr. David Eggleton—Chairman, Cranfield IT Institute

Mr. Iain Ferguson—Chairman, Plant Breeding International

Mr. Tony Glaze—Managing Director, Group Personnel

David Young—Finance Director, John Lewis Partnership

Food Imports

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish details of the current level of food imports into the United Kingdom from other EC member countries by (a) country of origin and (b) type of foodstuffs.

Mr. Needham: Details of the current level of food imports as requested are given in table II of "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", which is available in the Library of the House.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide a list of the published inspectors' reports in which the inspectors have urged him to ban auditors from selling non-auditing services to their audit clients.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I do not recall there being any such urging by inspectors.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ask the Financial Reporting Review Panel to examine a sample of quoted companies' accounts for compliance with the Companies Acts' requirements.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Halocarbon-free Technologies

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action is currently being undertaken by his Department to encourage industry to develop halocarbon-free technologies for appliances to be sold to the mass markets; and if he will make it his policy to establish an incentive scheme to assist industry with this process.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is in close touch with representatives of the sectors of industry concerned to ensure that they are fully informed of the intention to phase out the production of halocarbons, and the need to develop alternatives. The DTI, together with the Department of Environment, already operates schemes offering financial support for the research, development and dissemination of sound environmental technologies, and the replacement of halocarbons is a priority area within those schemes.

Balance of Trade

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the most up-to-date details of the United Kingdom balance of trade with each of the other member countries of the European Community.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom visible trade is regularly published in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", which is available in the Library of the House.

Maxwell Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the business connections of the inspectors appointed to investigate the Maxwell group of companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors appointed to investigate the affairs and membership of Mirror Group Newspapers plc under sections 432(2) and 442 of the Companies Act 1985 are Mr. J. L. Thomas QC and Mr. R. T. Turner FCA, a partner to Messrs Neville Russell, chartered accountants.

Post Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the net contribution to general Government accounts made by the Post Office group of companies for each of the last five years; and what contribution is projected for the current year and for each of the following three years.

Mr. Leigh: The actual and projected net contributions through the external financing requirement from the Post Office group of companies are as follows:

	£ million
Actual
1987-88	80·0
1988-89	102·0
1989-90	101·9
1990-91	nil
1991-92	74·0
Projected
1992-93	66·0
1993-94	181·0
1994-95	176·0
1995-96	158·0

Environmental Protection

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the ratio of imports to exports of environmental protection technologies in (a) 1980 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: Environmental protection technology is not a stand-alone technology but a term that can be applied to elements of a wide range of technological processes and products. As trade statistics are compiled by product area, it is not currently possible to identify separately the value or quantity of environmental import and export.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the proportion of the worldwide market for environmental protection technologies supplied by each of the Organisation for Economic Protection and Development nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Environmental protection technology is not a stand-alone technology but a term that can be applied to elements of a wide range of technological processes and products. Trade statistics are prepared on a product basis throughout the OECD countries; it is therefore not possible to identify separately the proportion of environmental protection technology supplied by each of the OECD nations. Similarly, it is not possible to identify the size of the world market for such technology with any accuracy.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has held with the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment concerning exports of environmental protection technologies; what assessment he has made of the Advisory Council on Science and Technology report on the worldwide market for environmental protection technologies; what plans he has to promote exports of environmental protection technologies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have recently received the second report from the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment (ACBE) which contained a number of valuable and constructive ideas aimed both at business and Government. One recommendations was that a joint environmental markets unit should be established to catalyse planning and marketing of environmental opportunities, both at home and overseas, to companies. The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology report also intensified the need to help industry to exploit its environmental expertise more effectively. I was therefore happy to accept the ACBE recommendation and the unit, staffed jointly by DTI and DoE officials, has already been set up.

In addition to the new unit, the DTI is hosting a technology partnership initiative conference in March 1993. This conference is designed to enable developing countries to share the benefits of technology in partnership with British Companies.

External Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring up to date table F2 of the monthly review of external trade statistics to take account of changes in the exchange rate since the last date on which the country figures were available; and if he will give an up-to-date figure for the weighted average excluding the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: The information requested will be published in table F2 of the monthly review of external trade statistics as soon as it becomes available. Data are currently available up to and including the first quarter of 1992. These were published in the November edition of the above publication, which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Machine Tools

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the total sales in 1992 prices of British machine tools for each year since 1979.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available at 1992 prices. Sales at 1985 prices are shown in the table.

	Sales at current prices[1] £ million	Producer Price Index (1985=100)	Sales at 1985 prices[1] £ million

Export Controls

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of trade if he will make a statement on the improvements instituted in export control procedures for sensitive technologies since November 1990.

Mr. Needham: The improvements instituted in export control procedures for sensitive technologies since November 1990 are as follows:

the establishment of a new section within the Export Control Organisation to process export licence applications for sensitive destination. The identification of sensitive destinations embrace a wide range of policy interests and concerns and is kept under regular review. The sensitive destinations are primarily of concern for chemical and biological weapons, nuclear weapons and missile delivery purposes; the introduction of revised procedures including:

(i) a requirement in all cases for comprehensive documentation covering the capability of goods to be exported to accompany the export licence application.

(ii) detailed technical assessment of all licence applications for sensitive destinations;

(iii) a requirement in all cases for a full and unambiguous statement of the intended end-use and end-user;

(iv) a requirement for rating requests to be made in writing. Exporters are asked when making enquiries to write to ECO;

(v) revision of the rating request form. Exporters must make clear if the goods are for military chemical, nuclear or missile applications;

(vi) revision to the export licence application form to incorporate an explicit question on whether the goods are for use for military purposes;

the extension of computerisation within the ECO to improve the capability for processing export licence applications;

the publication of more detailed and comprehensive guidance to exporters in guidance notes accompanying application forms and in literature describing in detail the purpose of controls and their operation;

the introduction in December 1990 of an "end-use" control which places a legal responsibility on the exporter to take all reasonable steps to ensure that goods are not being exported for use for CBW purposes, and making it an offence to export goods without a licence whether the exporter knows or suspects they are for use for such purposes. This was extended in 1991 to cover nuclear weapons and missile delivery systems; developing closer links and improving co-ordination with and among other Government Departments which advise DTI on licence applications.

Piper Alpha

Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 343, in respect of the conditions attached to the Piper Alpha abandonment programme, what is (a) the contractor employed in the recovery of the debris from the seabed and (b) the type of vessels engaged therein; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Trawling for debris has been carried out by SFF Services Ltd, a commercial enterprise owned by the Scottish Fishermen's Federation, using the trawlers Constant Friend and Starlight. Debris too large or too heavy to be lifted in a trawl has been recovered by Rockwater Ltd. using the diving support vessel Rockwater 2.

Recovery of remaining debris in the 500 to 1,500 m annulus is scheduled to be completed during the second quarter of 1993. Invitations to tender for this work will be issued in the new year.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Internal Market Council on 10 November.

Mr. Needham: I chaired the Internal Market Council on 10 November. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage also attended the Council.

The Council reached agreement on three important items. A resolution was agreed emphasising the importance of ensuring that the single market will work in practice; measures covering trade in cultural goods were agreed with amendments which meet essential UK interests; and a future medicines licensing system which will compete the single market in pharmaceuticals now seems certain to be agreed during our presidency.

The Council adopted our presidency resolution identifying steps which the Commission, member states, and the Council need to take to ensure the effective working of the single market. The resolution stresses the importance of even implementation and enforcement of single market legislation across the Community, and encourages co-operation between administrations to achieve this. Member states have through this resolution, underlined the importance of working to fulfil all single market obligations. The Commission will publish annual reports on the working of the single market.

Political agreement was reached on the directive, and the regulation on cultural objects. We won important concessions on three issues of immediate concern to the Government—a definition of "public collections", a legal base on which to license goods coming from outside the Community after 1 January 1993, and a practical solution to the requirement to license archaeological items of limited importance, regardless of monetary value. A satisfactory resolution of each of these was agreed for inclusion in the texts of the proposals. In addition, the burden of proof in Article 10 of the directive is now clearly stated as being "governed by the legislation of the requested Member State".

Broad political agreement was achieved, subject only to waiting reserves, on future medicines licensing systems. Final agreement on the proposed regulation and three directives is now expected to be reached this year.

Four intellectual property items were taken by the Council. Discussion on the proposed Community trade marks regulation focused particularly on the language regime for the Community Trade Marks Office operations. No final agreement was reached, but we still hope that decisions can be reached on the proposal at the December Council. This Council had a short orientation debate on the Commission's draft directive on harmonisation of the duration of copyright and we hope that decisions can be reached on the draft at the December Council. The Council also noted, and remitted for further work, a Commission paper identifying a series of principles intended to ensure that intellectual property rights are not infringed by the work of international standardisation bodies. Finally, the Commission expressed its intention to bring forward proposals for a blank tape levy.

A brief discussion of the European company statute proposal achieved progress on some technical points, but confirmed that substantial problems still remain. There was no discussion of the linked worker participation directive.

Finally, the Council agreed final adoption of the third life assurance, and vehicle noise type approval directives.

European Space Agency

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the ministerial council of the European Space Agency held in Granada on 9 and 10 November.

Mr. Leigh: I am pleased to report that Ministers at the European Space Agency meeting at Granada adopted a new, well-balanced, long-term plan which sets the course of European space activities until the end of this century.

The main achievement for the United Kingdom was an agreement to proceed with the full development of a major new Earth observation mission, known as Envisat-1. This mission will be flown on the British-led polar platform in 1998 and will carry the British-developed advanced synthetic aperture radar and a variety of environmental research instruments. This mission will provide an important contribution to our understanding of global environmental and climate issues and will lead to opportunities for commercial exploitation of the data in the future. Preparations will also be made for an operational meteorological mission, using the polar platform, to be carried out in collaboration with Eumetsat.

The conference also considered ESA's manned space programmes. The Hermes project will not proceed as planned but instead will be replaced by a three-year programme to study alternative options in collaboration with the USA and Russia. Other programmes which were approved were the Columbus manned attached laboratory and the data relay satellite system.

Amongst proposed future programmes is a study of options for future re-usable launchers such as the horizontal take-off and landing launches.

On a proposal from the United Kingdom, Ministers welcomed the work carried out to date by the Committee on Earth Observations Satellites (CEOS), aimed at co-ordinating the Earth Observation activities of the world's space agencies and recognised that CEOS and other international bodies could in time contribute to the emergence of a world space agency.

The result of this conference is a space programme with a much better balance between the applications of space and infrastructure programmes and with a greater emphasis on international collaboration. The United Kingdom welcomes ESA's drive to achieve effective collaboration both within Europe and with its international partners, including the USA and Russia.

New Businesses

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the numbers of new business start-ups for each year since 1980.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: The best available guide to trends in numbers of business starts comes from VAT data. The number of businesses newly registered for VAT for each year since 1980 are given in the table.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am the Minister responsible for deregulation within this Department. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is the Cabinet Minister with overall responsibility for the Government's deregulation initiative.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken since 9 April to encourage other Government departments to examine the possibility of deregulation or simplification of matters for which they have responsibility; what the results of these steps has been; what requirement he has now laid, or is about to lay, on Departments to discover and publish the cost of any new and old regulations for which they are responsible; what plans he has to increase the deregulatory momentum of the Government; how he proposes to monitor these matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has set in course a number of initiatives to increase and monitor the momentum of the Government's deregulation initiative. In this he has the full support of the Prime Minister.

All Departments have been asked to identify primary and secondary legislation and forms affecting business. Over 6,000 pieces of legislation and over 2,500 forms have been identified so far.

Some studies of individual businesses are currently underway to assess the cumulative burdens on business. The results of these two exercises will be used by Departments to draw up a prioritised programme of review.

On 30 June, I announced nine pilot local authority/business partnerships, a major initiative to improve the way local authorities apply regulations to business.

All Departments are required to conduct a compliance cost assessment on regulatory proposals which would impact on business. When these are published, copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she reached a decision on the timing of the introduction of legislation to implement her proposed abolition of wage councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Queen's speech announced our intention to introduce a Bill to continue the reform of industrial relations in this parliamentary Session and we made it clear that we would introduce the Bill at the earliest possible opportunity.

Job Vacancies

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of job vacancies in the east midlands.

Mr. McLoughlin: On the seasonally adjusted basis, there were 6,000 unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres in the east midlands region, in October 1992. Jobcentre vacancies do not represent the total number of vacancies available.

Asbestosis

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment is she will make a statement on the work of the Health and Safety Executive in relation to asbestosis.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive enforces a comprehensive package of legislation designed to protect workers from contracting asbestosis and other asbestos-related diseases. The asbestos regulations and their associated approved codes of practice—ACoPs—have recently been revised to implement three EC directives; they will come into force on 1 January 1993. The changes to the ACoPs introduce technical revisions to improve overall standards for all work with asbestos, especially the treatment and removal of asbestos insulation.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the numbers of employees in employment in manufacturing (a) in total, (b) by sector and (c) by standard region in 1979 and for the latest available date; and what was the percentage change in each case.

Mr. McLouglin: The information is shown in the table.

Job Club, Burslem Methodist Mission

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the reasons for the closure of the job club held at Burslem Methodist mission; and if she will review the decision to withdraw funding.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Ms. Joan Walley, dated 26 November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the closure of the Jobclub held at Burslem Methodist Mission. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Jobclubs continue to be both popular with the people who join and an effective way of helping them to find work. Since Jobclubs were introduced in 1984, 410,000 people have been helped to find work, and just over 130,000 others have gone on to other positive outcomes such as training. Following the announcement made by Secretary of State earlier this month, a substantial expansion of the programme will take place in 1993/94. We will then be able to help some 295,000 people, more than ever before.

To ensure that the funds available to operate Jobclub are used in the most effective way, decisions about the size and shape of the programme are taken by my area managers. They have the responsibility to target the resources available in a way which will help the greatest number of unemployed jobseekers. Because there was under utilization of capacity, Mrs. Joy Cross, my Area Manager for Staffordshire, decided to consolidate provision in the area and to close the Jobclub at the Burslem Methodist Mission operated by BTG Training and Consultancy. This decision was not taken lightly as we recognise that BTG is an organisation with which we had a good working relationship.

Alternative places will be offered to members in the remaining Jobclub in Burslem or, if preferred, in Hanley or Kidsgrove. Fares to attend Jobclubs are refunded in full to those who attend so no one will incur extra expenditure as a result of the changes.

In addition to taking members from the Jobclub which is closing, the remaining Jobclubs still have enough capacity to meet the expected demand for places from unemployed people for the foreseeable future.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Canada Geese

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to prevent agricultural damage in England caused by Canada geese; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Farmers are free to control geese during the open season using methods not prohibited by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. During the close season, from 1 February to 31 August, the Ministry may grant licences to permit the control of Canada geese in order to prevent serious agricultural damage. Advice to farmers on the most suitable and effective methods of control of Canada geese is available from the Agricultural Development Advisory Service, the Ministry's wildlife advisers. Ministry funded research into more effective control of Canada geese has developed a simple method of making Canada goose eggs unviable without causing undue suffering to the adult birds. Research is also being undertaken on the population dynamics and movements of Canada geese to provide background for future studies on the effects of various control methods on population size and movement.

Hens

Mr. Reston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps, along with his EC colleagues, to ban the rearing and keeping of hens in battery cages.

Mr. Soames: It is already the Government's policy that the current battery cage design, in which only feeding and drinking facilities are provided, must be phased out on a Community basis. We will press for this when the Commission's proposals for the revision of the battery hens directive and new standards for hens kept in alternative systems are negotiated.

Milk Sampling

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to increase the charges to producer-retailers of his Ministry's milk sampling, in percentage and cash terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 6 November, Official Report columns 418-19. The £16—34 per cent.—increase in the charge for milk sampling and testing takes effect on 27 November 1992.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to end the duplication of milk sampling by his Ministry and environmental health authorities.

Mr. Curry: There is no duplication. The Ministry is responsible for the on farm sampling, and subsequent testing of untreated milk. This work is undertaken by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service. Local authority environmental health officers are responsible for checking the quality of all milk once it has left the farm. This involves some sampling and testing. In rare instances when milk is suspected of causing food poisoning they may also take a sample of milk on dairy farms in the course of their investigations.

Wildlife Incident Investigation Scheme

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the role of the wildlife incident investigation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Under the wildlife incident investigation scheme, inquiries are made into reports of suspected poisoning by pesticides that involve vertebrate wildlife, chiefly birds and mammals, companion animals and honeybees. The results are used in reviews of the conditions of approval of pesticide products. Evidence of misuse or abuse may also contribute to prosecutions or other enforcement action.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (i) the total cost, adjusted to 1992 prices of the wildlife incident investigation scheme for England and Wales and (ii) the proportion of the total cost contributed by the agrochemical industry levy, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: The costs of the wildlife incident investigation scheme in England and Wales chargeable to the agrochemical levy adjusted to 1992 prices are as follows:

1988[1]	630,000
1989[1]	465,000
1990-91 (15 months)	744,000
1991-92	815,000
1992-93 (F)	770,000

[1] Includes figures for Scotland.

Other costs associated with the wildlife incident investigation scheme are borne by departments, but except for 1992-93, at £374,000, are not readily identifiable.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total cost to date of the compensation paid to farmers and associated costs for the disposal of animal carcases from the outbreak of BSE in 1986.

Mr. Soames: Expenditure recorded from August 1988, when the slaughter with compensation policy was introduced, until the end of October 1992 is £74·4 million.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of diary fars have experienced at least one case of BSE in (a) Dyfed, (b) Wales and (c) Great Britain.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

Dyfed Per cent.	Wales Per cent.	Great Britain Per cent.
30·89	28·48	39·40

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of confirmed cases of BSE to date during 1992, and the total number of cattle diagnosed that were (a) under two years of age, (b) aged two to three years, (c) aged three to four years, (d) aged five to six years and (e) aged seven or more years.

Mr. Soames: The information requested for cases notified in Great Britain in 1992 by age at onset of clinical symptoms is as follows:

	Number notified	Number confirmed	Outstanding results
Less than 2 years	39	0	3
2 and less than 3 years	247	19	29
3 and less than 4 years	1,782	1,058	197

Unknown	6,199	1,995	3,252
	36,940	26,316

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle born after the ban on ruminant protein in cattle feed was introduced in July 1988 have since died of BSE; and if he will provide these figures for every month during 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Soames: To 19 November 1992, BSE has been confirmed in 599 cattle born after 18 July 1988. Because of the delay caused by the necessary confirmation procedures, these cases are listed by month of birth rather than month of confirmation. Some of these cases are still under investigation for details of their history.

At its meeting in October, the Tyrrell committee considered the appearance of cases in animals born since the ban and concluded that all the evidence pointed towards feed being the origin of such cases, and that there was no evidence of any other source.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of confirmed cases of BSE in Britain for each year up to 1991 and for each month during 1992.

Mr. Soames: The number of confirmed cases of BSE in Great Britain since the disease was made notifiable on 21 June 1988, by date of report is as follows:

	Number
1988	2,185
1989	7,136
1990	14,180
1991	25,025

September 1992	2,366
October 1992	1,161

1992 figures are incomplete due to the time between cases being reported and confirmation by histopathology.

Apples (Dumping)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to (a) the French authorities and (b) the European Commission on dumping of apples from France in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: I know of no illegal aids to justify any representations. If evidence were presented to me I would make the appropriate representations.

Regulation Measures

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April.

Mr. Curry: Much of the legislation handled by my Department is governed by the EC. No Bills of a regulatory nature have been enacted by this Department since the last general election.

ENVIRONMENT

Sellafield

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the facilities at Sellafield to treat the spent nuclear fuel containing highly radioactive isotopes currently on site will be started.

Mr. Maclean: Facilities at Sellafield presently reprocess spent Magnox fuel and have done so since the early 1960s. The thermol oxide reprocessing plant facilities will not start the commercial reprocessing of oxide fuel until the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate is satisfied with the safety of the plant and the regulatory authorities have no objections on waste management grounds.

Water

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce new legal standards on phosphates in water.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have no immediate plans to introduce new legal standards on phosphates in water.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what were the planned lead times between the laying of the regulations under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 concerning water licensing and the implementation of the licensing system (a) when the Act received Royal Assent, (b) when the consultation papers were issued in August and (c) what is the proposed lead time now;

(2) when he will bring before Parliament regulations under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 introducing a new waste management licensing system.

Mr. Maclean: The waste management licensing system will be implemented by means of secondary legislation and guidance issued by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State. It was not therefore necessary to establish an implementation timetable at the time the Act received Royal Assent. The Government published a legislation timetable on 25 June 1991 which envisaged laying regulations on waste management licensing in December 1992 to come into effect in April 1993. Consultation is proceeding on the complex and detailed measures needed to implement the new system and the resulting regulations will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible; it is still my intention to bring the licensing system into force on 1 April 1993.

Industrial Effluent

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to establish a statutory register indicating the levels of industrial waste released into sewers through the conclusion of trade effluent consents/agreements between industrial companies and water authorities.

Mr. Maclean: Under the Water Industry Act 1991, details of consents for discharges to sewers issued by sewerage undertakers are available for public inspection. Under the arrangements for integrated pollution control of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, controlled releases will be subject to monitoring, upon which, as a condition of authorisation, data must be supplied to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, and placed on public registers.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he and his Department have had in the last six months with the council of the Association for the Conservation of Energy on energy efficiency matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I met the council of the Association for the Conservation of Energy on 15 October, and my officials also keep in touch with the association to exchange views on a range of energy efficiency matters. I value the contribution that the association makes to the development of policy and the way it represents the views of its members.

Recycling

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish a United Kingdom-wide target for the recycling of 25 per cent. of all household waste by the year 2000.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have already set a target of recycling half of the country's recyclable household waste by the end of the century, in the 1990 White Paper on the environment, "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200). In the White Paper, it was estimated that this equates to about 25 per cent. of total household waste.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's latest estimate of the amount of domestic waste being recycled; and if he will list the six best and the six worst local authorities in this respect.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's statistical report "The UK Environment", published in October 1992, estimates that about 5 per cent. of household waste is currently recycled. More detailed information is not currently available but local authorities have been asked to provide it in the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy's new statistical returns on waste collection and disposal. The results of those returns should be available early in 1993.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to limit the use of hydrochlorofluorocarbons, methyl bromide and methyl chloride to applications in which effective recycling can be guaranteed.

Mr. Maclean: Negotiations are currently under way into the renegotiation of the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer, where controls on HCFCs and methyl bromide will be discussed. I understand that all uses of methyl chloride are as feedstock, where the substance is destroyed.

135. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage the newspaper and textile industries to promote and participate in recyling schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The newspaper and textiles industries already promote and participate in recyling schemes throughout the country. In particular, the Newspaper Publishers Association agreed in 1991, after discussions with the Government, to aim to increase the proportion of waste paper used in newsprint consumed in the United Kingdom to at least 40 per cent. by the end of the decade. I am also aware that the textile reclamation industry has been actively seeking to increase recycling rates in association with local authorities.

The measures being taken by the Government to set the right economic and legislative framework for recycling, set out in "This Common Inheritance: the Second Year Report" (Cm 2068), will encourage further activity by those industries.

Waste Carriers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of (a) registered waste carriers, (b) applicants for registration not yet processed and (c) applications where the applicant or other relevant person had an unspent conviction for prescribed offences under the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held by my Department. Each waste regulation authority is required to maintain a register, available for public inspection, which contains, inter alia, details of registered waste carriers and any unspent convictions they may have for prescribed offences.

Emission Levels

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the progress made to date within the United Kingdom in implementing the UN Commission for Europe convention on long-range transboundary air pollution relating to nitrogen oxides.

Mr. Maclean: Under the 1988 Sofia protocol to the convention, the United Kingdom is committed to bringing emissions of oxides of nitrogen (NOx) back down to their 1987 levels by 1994. Measures being taken which will help to meet this target include the implementation of tough new emissions standards for most road vehicles, of the new controls on industrial emissions under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, and of the EC large combustion plants directive. Further details are given in the Environment White Paper 1990, "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200), and the first and second year reports of the Paper (Cm 1655 and 2068), copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department in fulfilling the obligations on emission levels imposed by the EC large combustion plants directive.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has recently sent emission figures for 1991 to the European Commission, reporting on progress under the EC large combustion plants directive, which requires reductions in sulphur dioxide (SO_2) and oxides of nitrogen (NOx) emissions—the major contributors to acid deposition—from existing large combustion plants. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House. The figures show that the UK is meeting its national plan for reducing emissions of SO_2 and NOx from existing plants. The figures also indicate that the UK is on course to meeting the directive's target of a 20 per cent. cut in SO_2 and a 15 per cent. cut in NOx by 1993.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are currently being undertaken by his Department to improve the accuracy of data relating to emissions of volatile organic compounds in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: One of the principal objectives of my Department's air quality research programme is to improve the accuracy of data on volatile organic compound emissions in the United Kingdom. Warren Spring Laboratory and the National Physical Laboratory have been contracted to work on sources and emissions of volatile organic compounds and options for their abatement. The university of Leeds has been contracted to provide information on the impacts of individual VOCs on ozone production.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authority areas granted derogations on ground level concentrations of sulphur dioxide and smoke in respect of EC directive 80/779; and what are the levels of (a) sulphur dioxide and (b) smoke concentrations in each such area, expressed in micrograms per cubic metre, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

Average 98th percentile of sulphur dioxide concentrations in each of the local authorities having derogation in respect of the European Community Directive 80/779/EEC

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the work undertaken by his Department resulting from the report and maps published by the United Kingdom critical costs advisory group in March.

Mr. Maclean The report and maps published by the United Kingdom Critical Loads Advisory Group are being used by the Department to provide a scientific basis for the evaluation of air pollution emission control scenarios and the evolution of cost-effective emission control policies.

Sand Dredging

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers are available to him to control the discharge of salt water that has been extracted from dredged sand.

Mr. Baldry: Discharges of salt water from land based accumulations of dredged sand can be controlled by the National Rivers Authority under the Water Resources Act 1991. Conditions controlling the rate and quality of the water discharged can be imposed, via discharge consents, in order to protect receiving waters.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Dafis To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set a target of transferring at least 10 nature conservation review sites into national nature reserves per annum.

Mr. Maclean: No. The designation of NNRs in England is a matter for English Nature. The rate of progress depends on the funds available and the willingness of site owners to enter into the required commitments.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of public money was spent by English Nature for the purchase of national nature reserves in 1991-92; and what is the expected spend for 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 25 November 1992] English Nature's expenditure on purchase of national nature reserves was £81,944 in 1991-92 and is expected to be £93,000 in 1992-93.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total tonnage of toxic waste transported from the United Kingdom to developing countries during each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean There have been no exports of hazardous waste for final disposal to developing countries over the last three years.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase available funding to nature conservation review sites for the maintenance of the sites of special scientific interest network and their effective monitoring.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has recently announced an additional £625,000 in the current financial year to allow English Nature to finalise long-standing management agreements inheritated from the former Nature Conservancy Council. Next year's general improvement area settlement, announced earlier this month, will enable English Nature to meet its core site protection and management responsibilities. English Nature aims to undertake appropriate management and monitoring of the SSSI network.

Noise Pollution

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to draw up a code of noise pollution control measures for public houses to replace the existing music licensing system.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans to replace the current system of licensing music in public houses. In addition to licensing conditions, noise from licensed premises can be controlled by the local authority under the statutory nuisance provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Acid Waters Review Group

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the work undertaken by his Department resulting from the United Kingdom acid waters review group report published in 1988.

Mr. Mclean: A number of the recommendations on the United Kingdom acid waters review group report have been implemented. These include the setting up and operation of the United Kingdom acid waters monitoring network; the appointment of a critical loads advisory group, acid waters sub-group under the chairmanship of Professor Battarbee, University college, London; the recent completion of a nationwide survey of lake and stream acidity; the development of freshwater chemistry and biological acidification models; and departmental sponsorship of research at a number of universities and research institutes throughout the United Kingdom.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to enforce section 33 of the Environment Protection Act 1990 in relation to releases of ozone-depleting substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no executive responsibility for the enforcement of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Waste regulation authorities, as the authorities that will have the duty of granting waste management licences, will be mainly responsible for enforcement, but there is no restriction on who may instigate prosecutions for offences under section 33.

Section 33(1)(c) of the Act, which came into force on 1 April this year, makes it an offence to treat, keep or dispose of controlled waste in a manner likely to cause pollution of the environment or harm to human health. Section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 imposes a duty of care on those holding controlled waste to take reasonable steps to prevent a breach of section 33. Guidance for waste holders on how to discharge this duty was issued in a code of practice published jointly by the Scottish Office, the Welsh Office and my Department in December 1991. The provisions of sections 33 and 34 of the Act are not specific to particular substances, nor is the advice on those sections.

It is intended that section 33, together with the waste management licensing system in the Act, will be brought fully into force on 1 April 1993, and further advice will be issued before then.

Climate Change Convention

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Government policy towards the proposal from the United States of America that the climate change convention agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development be ratified by the end of the current year.

Mr. Maclean: The Government welcome the ratification of the UN framework convention on climate change by the United States of America, and by other countries, including China. Along with the other Group of Seven countries and member states of the European Community, the United Kingdom is committed to seek to ratify the convention by the end of 1993.

Acid Rain

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific action has been undertaken by his Department resulting from the report of the United Kingdom review group on acid rain published in 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The 1990 report of the United Kingdom review group on acid rain contains a large number of research recommendations. In response to these, work has been commissioned within my Department's air quality research programme aimed at improving information on emissions of acidifying compounds and of their precursors, on the transport and transformation of these compounds in the atmosphere, on the quantities deposited and on their impacts in the environment.

Photochemical Oxidants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the work undertaken by his Department resulting from the United Kingdom photochemical oxidants review group report published in 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The 1990 report of the photochemical oxidants review group contains a number of research recommendations. The response of my Department has been to maintain and expand monitoring for nitrogen dioxide and other air pollutants highlighted in the report and to continue work on the atmospheric chemistry of nitrogen oxides and ammonia and on their environmental impacts.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent of the loss of the ozone layer over the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on proposals to eliminate ozone-destroying chemicals.

Mr. Maclean: The latest estimate of the average depletion of the ozone layer at British latitudes, based on the 1992 World Meteorological Organisation/United Nations Environment Programme scientific assessment of ozone depletion, is 8 per cent. per decade. International negotiations on the control of ozone-depleting substances are currently taking place in Copenhagen.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Redwood: I have oversight of deregulation of such matters within the Department of the Environment, working closely with my colleagues.

Contaminated Land Registers

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the basis for excluding the Kaolin mounds of Cornwall from the draft regulations under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(2) what is the basis for excluding the old tin mining areas of Cornwall with arsenic contaminant from the draft regulations under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(3) what is the basis of excluding the former zinc mining areas with cadmium contaminant from the draft regulations under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr Maclean: The uses of land listed in the draft regulations for initial coverage by registers are those considered most likely to give rise to contamination. The china clay waste mounts of Cornwall do not give rise to significant potential for contamination. Current research being undertaken for my Department is identifying, in general terms, areas of metalliferous mining and the occurrence of natural contaminants associated with mined ground.

Rights of Way

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which rights of way have been stopped up since 1990 and when the stopping up was undertaken, under (a) the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, section 247 and (b) previous procedures, since 1962; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Powers under section 247 are exercisable by the Secretary of State for Transport, as well as the Secretary of State for the Environment. Information as requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Council Tax

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to make the single household discount 50 per cent. instead of 25 per cent.

Mr. Robin Squire: No.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the distributable amount of non-domestic rates for 1993-94; and if he will explain the basis of his calculations.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 12 November that the non-domestic rate multiplier for 1993-94 will rise by 3·5 per cent. from its 1992-93 level to 0·416. The distributable amount of non-domestic rates based on this poundage will be £11,559 million. This includes an Exchequer payment of £922 million into the non-domestic rates pool to compensate local authorities for the shortfall in 1992-93 and 1993-94 which would otherwise occur as a result of the Non-Domestic Rating Act 1992. The basis of the calculation is set out in the table.

Rural Land loss

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to ensure that present Government guidance on rural land loss is accurate and up to date.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Current Government guidance on rural land loss is based on the land use change statistics (LUCS) collected for my Department since 1985 by the Ordnance Survey as part of its map revision work. Recent research has confirmed the robustness of the data, particularly for monitoring changes to urban uses. Some time does, however, elapse before changes in land use are recorded in the LUCS series and Ordnance Survey is testing new procedures with the objective of providing consistent information for urban areas within one year of any change occurring. The 1990 countryside survey, which is part-funded by my Department, will provide an independent source of estimates of rural change between 1978, 1984 and 1990, based on sampled data.

Recent research commissioned by my Department has recommended that the need for consistent information across all land uses would be most effectively met by a census approach carried out by Ordnance Survey and continuously updated by a revised system of land use change statistics. The Department is proceeding to develop the methodology and carry out pilot work for this land use stock system.

Conservation Bodies (Land Purchase)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of grant was made by English Nature under section 38 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to voluntary conservation bodies for the purposes of land purchase in 1991-92; and what is the expected spend for 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 25 November 1992]: English Nature made land purchase grants to voluntary conservation bodies totalling £258,632 in 1991-92 and expects to spend a further £252,000 on such grants in 1992-93.

Orimulsion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost to prevent or minimise and render harmless the heavy metals and nickel sulphate released into air, water and land by the burning of orimulsion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 24 November 1992]: The burning of orimulsion or other fuels at a power station requires an authorisation from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP).

In granting authorisations, HMIP will have regard to the advice contained in the chief inspectors guidance note IPR1/1, "Large Boilers and Furnaces 50MW(th) and Over". This provides guidance on the techniques considered by the chief inspector to be appropriate to achieve the requirement set out in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to use the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost to prevent or minimise pollution.

A copy of the guidance note has been placed in the House Library.

Pit Closures

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what external legal advice he has taken over who is responsible for the cost of clearing any future river pollution arising from the closure of collieries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 24 November 1992]: None. It is for the National Rivers Authority, and in turn, the courts, to apply the provisions of the Water Resources Act 1991 and any other relevant legislation to any particular case.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the National Rivers Authority, water company chairmen and British Coal about the environmental effects of colliery closures; what consultancy work is planned and by whom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 24 November 1992]: It is for British Coal and the National Rivers Authority, in the first place, to assess the environmental effects of colliery closures. The NRA is currently carrying out a review of water pollution from abandoned mines.

Leasehold Properties

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department holds on the total number of blocks of flats containing either four or six flats in England, and on the proportion of these in which the freehold belongs to (a) a local authority or housing association or (b) a private landlord.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The Department does not hold information on the number of blocks of flats in England. The best estimate comes from the 1986 English house condition survey, which suggests that there are some 164,000 purpose-built and converted blocks in England containing either four or six flats. No data were collected on who owns the freehold of these blocks.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will set out the distribution in the United Kingdom of each of the Community initiatives under the European structural funds, in each assisted region, in terms of (a) allocation of grant in ecu and in pound sterling at current exchange rates in total and sub-divided into European regional development fund, European social fund and other structural funds and (b) the value of grant so far approved in ecu and pound sterling at current exchange rates; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of allocations to the United Kingdom from the Community initiatives under the European structural funds; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the European structural funds Community initiatives; what was the allocation to the United Kingdom for the period 1991 to 1993 in ecus and in pound sterling at current exchange rates in total and sub-divided into European regional development fund, European social fund and other structural funds; and what was the United Kingdom allocation under each programme as a percentage of the total allocation for each programme.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 24 November 1992]: The allocation of funds to Community initiatives is determined by the Commission within an overall budget limit.

The European Commission has launched 13 such initiatives. The most recent (RETEX) has not yet reached the stage of firm allocations. The available figures for the other 12 initiatives are as follows:

Note: The authentic figures for allocations are those expressed in ecu. Equivalents expressed at the current exchange rate of £1 = 1.23 ecu are for illustrative purposes only. For most initiatives part of the allocation has already been received from the Commission at a previous exchange rate. The final sterling sums available to the programmes will depend on the exchange rates at the time the various payments are received.

The figures for grant so far approved are being constantly updated as frequent programme committee meetings are held.

Though precise calculations are not possible, the United Kingdom's share of expenditure under the initiatives is similar to its share of expenditure from the structural funds as a whole.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 27 November 1992

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Company Debts (Writs)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to monitor the rate of progress through the courts of cases involving writs for non-payment of debts owed by one company to another.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The conduct of cases for non-payment of debts issued in the Queen's Bench division of the High Court is largely a matter for the parties themselves. Where cases are disputed, waiting times for trial are monitored.

High Court

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many deputy High Court judges sat in the High Court during the week commencing 16 November; and of these how many were circuit judges.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There were 313 sittings in the High Court in London during the week commencing 16 November. Of these, 66 sittings were undertaken by deputy High Court judges, and 52 by circuit judges.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many High Court judges were available for sitting, and sat, in the High Court in the week commencing 16 November.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It has not been possible to obtain the information requested in the time available. I will write to the right hon. and learned Gentleman.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has for the appointment of more High Court judges.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In recognition of the importance of ensuring that there are sufficient judges, the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice have asked a group of senior judges, with officials of the Lord Chancellor's Department, to advise them on the work, deployment and numbers of High Court judges. Until that advice has been received, it would be premature to reach a view about the size of the High Court bench in present circumstances.

PRIME MINISTER

Wild Birds

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring forward proposals for making the power to impose licensing regulation over the shooting of wild birds, including pigeons, crows and sparrows, a matter for individual member states of the EC.

The Prime Minister: We shall continue to seek the support of member states for an amendment to the EC directive on the conservation of wild birds (79/409/EEC), to recognise specifically the need for member states to exercise year-round control of pest.

Member states may, under the provisions of the directive, derogate from the general prohibition on the killing of birds by issuing licences for controlling species which cause damage or threaten public health or safety. We intend to amend the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to enable us to bring in a licensing system. The other member states have already introduced licensing systems.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what account he took of the minute of August 1990, about the implications of the invasion for trade with Iraq, referred to in his letter of 23 November to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, in making statements in 1992 relating to legal proceedings involving the directors of Matrix Churchill.

The Prime Minister: In all my correspondence and other replies I have taken into account the advice and information which was available to me.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General if he will attend sittings of the Standing Committee on the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill.

The Attorney-General: I have no intention at present to attend sittings of this Committee.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Computers

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to encourage procurement from the private sector in the field of computer software and information systems for the provision of functions currently carried out in-house.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The citizens charter White Paper (Cm 2101), published on 25 November, gives details of Departments' plans for market testing to September 1993. A number of Departments list all or part of their information systems/information technology functions as candidates for market testing to September 1993.

Through the market-testing process, Departments will buy in support services wherever they offer better value for money.

Agencies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidelines are issued to next steps agencies on the distinction between policy and administration in relation to the delegation of responsibility to chief executives of executive agencies.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The allocation of responsibilities between a Minister and the chief executive of an agency is set out in the agency's framework document and varies in each case. This does not necessarily provide an absolute distinction between policy and administration. In its reply to the seventh report from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, session 1990-91 (Cm 1761), the Government noted that managers

"should contribute to the formulation of the policy which they have to execute, just as those offering policy advice to Ministers need to appreciate the practicalities of policy delivery."

My office has issued guidance from time to time on the arrangements for dealing with parliamentary questions and letters from Members of Parliament on matters delegated to agencies, with the suggestion that the allocation of responsibilities in the agency's framework document should normally be used as the basis for deciding whether the chief executive or the Minister should reply.

EDUCATION

Special Needs Education

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the average time taken by each local education authority to assess a child as special needs from the initial application to the issue of a statement of special needs.

Mr. Forth: Information for each authority is not available centrally. However, the Audit Commission/HMI study "Getting in on the Act", published in June 1992, presented data for a sample of 12 local education authorities, and discovered that the median length of time taken to complete an assessment in these authorities is 12 months. The new Education Bill envisages that regulations may provide that, where a local education authority is under a duty to make an assessment, the duty must, subject to prescribed exceptions, be performed within a prescribed period.

Examinations League Table

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he is taking to correct errors in the list of examination results obtained in secondary schools published by his Department; and what discussions he has held with schools whose results have been adversely reported.

Mr. Forth: All allegations of incorrect information in the comparative tables are being investigated individually. Where significant errors have been proved to be the fault of the Department or its contractors, amendment slips have been issued. To date, only six such errors have been found—two errors in school names and four errors in examination results. In each case, an amendment slip has been issued. All schools alleging errors will receive notification in writing of the results of the Department's inquiries into their cases.

Special Schools (Examination Results)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy for future years not to publish the examination results obtained in special schools.

Mr. Forth: The decision to publish the examination results of special schools in the comparative tables was reached after detailed consultations with representatives of special needs organisations. It is entirely right that special schools, as all other schools, should receive credit for the results they achieve.

Swimming

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make the teaching of water safety compulsory in all schools.

Mr. Forth: The statutory order for physical education in the national curriculum requires that, from August 1994, all pupils should, by the age of 11, be able to swim unaided at least 25 m and demonstrate an understanding of water safety.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which schools (a) have swimming pools on site and (b) employ (i) swimming instructors and (ii) specialist teachers to teach swimming, life-saving and water safety; what hours are worked; and what information he has about the award of swimming proficiency certificates at each school.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the implications of local management of schools and grant-maintained status on the ability of schools to maintain current levels of swimming instruction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Local management of schools and grant-maintained status do not affect the ability of schools to maintain current levels of swimming instruction. It is open to local education authorities in their local management of schools schemes to decide whether to delegate provision for swimming to school level or to retain it centrally. Annual maintenance grant for a grant-maintained school replicates the local management of schools formula of the local education authority in which that school is located, as well as including a share of the funds local education authorities spend centrally on their schools.

Environmental Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the provision of training for teachers for the delivery of cross-curricular themes, with particular reference to the theme of environmental education.

Mr. Forth: A number of national curriculum subjects include studies relevant to environmental education. My right hon. Friend seeks to ensure, through his criteria for the approval of courses, that initial training gives thorough preparation for teaching the national curriculum. He also provides specific grant to support national curriculum-related training for serving teachers. It is essentially for schools and local education authorities to determine what priority to give to particular subject areas.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the Government's policy towards pupil exclusions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Government are concerned that too many children are being excluded from school, either permanently or temporarily. My right hon. Friend is anxious to remedy this situation and will shortly be publishing a discussions paper on exclusions, inviting comments from interested parties. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list all current employment training schemes currently available to those out of work; what is the rate of allowance in each case; and how many male and females were taking part in each scheme at 1 November.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employment training is the training programme for unemployed people. At October 1992, the latest date for which information is available, there were about 122,000 people in training in Great Britain. The allowance paid to trainees is equivalent to their benefit entitlement immediately before joining the programme plus £10 a week. During April-July 1992, the latest period available, 68 per cent. of employment training entrants were men and 32 per cent. women.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Housing)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 781, if he will list by location how much revenue his Department expects to raise for each of the five prison officer houses in south Yorkshire that have been identified as being put on the housing market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The five remaining properties, formerly prison officers' houses, are in Brierholme close, Hatfield, south Yorkshire, and are on the market for sale with a local agent. Four of the houses have asking prices of £37,500 and one house has an asking price of £40,000.

Alcohol Sales (Minors)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to halt the sale of alcohol to minors.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 30 October to a question from the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) at columns 908-9.

Victim Support

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish details of the funding provided to victim support in each year since public funds were provided for this purpose together with any information he has concerning the number of persons employed (a) full time and (b) part time by this organisation for each year.

Mr. Jack: The table shows Home Office grant to victim support since funding began in 1979. Many local schemes also receive support from their local authority, but details are not recorded centrally. The figures for staff numbers relate to posts, not persons, and it is not now possible to distinguish between full and part-time employees for earlier years.

[3] 1984-85 ran from 1 January 1984 to 5 April 1985.

[4] In its first year the local funding grant covered contingencies only.

Underground Emergency Facilities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the uses that would be permitted or encouraged in underground facilities for use in wartime or emergency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since the sites are to be disposed of we have no plans to permit their use for other purposes.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial resources are being made to provide support, maintenance and accommodation to the 150 Bosnian refugees and their dependants to arrive in the United Kingdom; from which departmental budgets resources are being provided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office is providing funding for the reception and initial accommodation in this country for the 150 Bosnian refugees. They and any dependants who join them will then be found accommodation in the community where they will be entitled to the range of statutory benefits and services available to the rest of the population. The Home Office will also provide funds for some continued support.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the 150 Bosnian refugees and their dependants to arrive in the United Kingdom; what arrangements he has made for them to be received into the United Kingdom; what organisation is responsible for their support, maintenance and accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I am awaiting arrival details from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

I have asked the Refugee Council and the British Red Cross to make arrangements for their reception and initial accommodation. More permanent accommodation in the community and further support will be arranged by the Refugee Council.

Visitors (Absconders)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors from (a) Jamaica, (b) Columbia, (c) Australia, (d) New Zealand, (e) India, (f) Pakistan, (g) Sri Lanka, (h) Nigeria, (i) Ghana, (j) Guyana, (k) Trinidad and Tobago, (l) Canada and (m) the United States of America have absconded after having been given leave to enter the United Kingdom as visitors in each year since 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Comprehensive reliable information on the total number of persons from these countries given leave to enter the United Kingdom as visitors who have then remained here after their leave has expired is not available.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 November relating to the conviction of Mr. Colin Wallace, Official Report, column 544; what consideration was given to the submission made by his solicitor, Mr. Jim Nichol, and delivered by hand to his Department on 14 November.

Mr. Jack: I can now confirm that the Secretary of State has received the submission delivered by hand to this Department on 14 November and it is now being considered in order to see whether it discloses grounds for any action by the Secretary of State in connection with Mr. Wallace's conviction.

Fact Finding Visits (Cost)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 129-30, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of (a) the chief executive of the Fire Service College's visits to (i) the United States and (ii) the Netherlands and (b) the deputy commandant of the college's visits to (i) Europe, (ii) the middle east, (iii) the far east and (iv) Africa, during the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This is a matter for which the Fire Service College is responsible and I have asked the chief executive to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mrs. H. Kinsey to Mr. Martin Rednond, dated 26 November 1992.

Cost of Fact Finding Visits

The Secretary of State has asked the Fire Service College to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the cost to the Exchequer of the fact finding visits which the Commandant Chief Executive and the Deputy Commandant have made during the last twelve months. I am replying on the Commandant Chief Executive's behalf because he is currently on holiday.

There has been no cost to the Exchequer arising from these visits since April because the College now operates as a trading fund. We cover our expenditure from the income we earn. However, the cost to the Exchequer of the Commandant's visit to Europe last year was £417 and the cost to the College of the visits to America and Europe since April have been £3,335 and £4,129 respectively.

The costs to the Exchequer of the Deputy Commandant's visits to the Middle East and Europe prior to April were £7,043 and £187 respectively. The cost to the College of his visits to the Far East and Europe since April have been £3,609 and £1,285 respectively.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will be published in the Official Report. I will now place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

WALES

Dolphins

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the welfare of dolphins off the Welsh coast.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Thirty-two representations have been received in the last 12 months from a number of sources, including Members of the House, the general public and conservation bodies.

Cardiac Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the originally expected date for publication of the Touche Ross report into cardiology and cardiac surgery in Wales; when he now expects the report to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend originally anticipated the appraisal being completed by mid-1992, but this has been extended in the light of the considerable amount of work and extensive consultation necessary to ensure a comprehensive assessment. My right hon. Friend now expects the report to be with him before the end of the year.

General Practitioners

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average number of applicants for vacancies for general practitioner posts in Wales every year since 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The combined figures for England and Wales are shown in the table. Separate figures for Wales are not available. The figures are based on records kept by the Medical Practices Committee only in relation to GP vacancies advertised by the family health services authorities, which are 11 per cent. of the total. These relate only to new practices or to vacancies for single-handed GPs. The selection of candidates to fill other vacancies arising in established practice partnerships is a matter for the partnership concerned. Statistics in relation to these are not collected centrally.

Date	Average number of applicants for each vacancy
30 October 1989	32
30 October 1990	33
30 October 1991	25

Tourist Information Centres

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many tourists visited tourist information centres in Wales each year since 1989; and what were the numbers of such tourists who came from outside the United Kingdom.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Between January and the end of September 1992, 2,970,000 tourists visited tourist information centres in Wales. Of these, 401,970 came from outside the United Kingdom. Information was not compiled on a comparable basis prior to 1992.

National Parks

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the national parks review panel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A statement outlining the Government's proposals for implementing relevant recommendations made in the report of the national parks review panel was issued in January 1992. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Discarded Car Tyres

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what surveys his Department has carried out into the number of tyres discarded from cars in Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and what estimate he has made of the number that were (a) remoulded and (b) dumped.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A 1990 report commissioned by the Department of Trade and Industry estimated that around 30 million used tyres are removed annually from vehicles in the United Kingdom; of these, around 10 per cent. are retreaded, and 70 per cent. landfilled, dumped or stockpiled. No separate figures are available for Wales. The Department of the Environment has commissioned a survey of existing dumps of tyres throughout the United Kingdom, and the results will be available in the new year.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to limit drug abuse in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) on 2 November 1992 at column 8.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what support is available to local authorities in Wales for anti-drug and drug awareness campaigns.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Resources totalling some £3 million are allocated annually to meet the costs of drug prevention, treatment and rehabilitation, of which £450,000 is allocated to local education authorities and £200,000 for the employment of health education/promotion officers (drugs) in each health authority. Other projects also undertake prevention work, but it is not possible to separate costs.

Road Schemes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the wildlife sites, (b) sites of special scientific interest, (c) ancient woodlands, (d) archaeological sites and (e) National Trust areas that are threatened with damage by the targeted road improvement and road building schemes put forward by his Department from now until the year 2000 indicating both the location of the site affected and the road improvement or road building scheme involved.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In order to protect the species concerned, it is not departmental policy to disclose the location of wildlife sites. The remaining information applicable to proposed major road schemes in Wales where a preferred route has been announced is as follows:

Scheme name	Site affected	Location
Short term
M4 Second Severn Crossing approach road, Gwent	Site of special scientific interest	Gwent Levels Severn estuary
	Archaeological	Caldicot
A5 Bethesda Bypass	Ancient woodlands	Bryn Meurig

Every effort will be made to minimise and mitigate the effects of road schemes on such sites.

Time bands and schemes indicated are those which accord with the 1992 supplement to "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s".

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the designated wildlife sites, (b) sites of special scientific interest, (c) ancient woodlands, (d) archaeological sites and (e) National Trust areas that have been damaged by road improvement and road building projects in Wales during the last five years, indicating the location of the site and the road scheme involved.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In order to protect the species concerned, it is not departmental policy to disclose the location of wildlife sites. The remaining information for major road schemes carried out in Wales in the last five years is as follows:

Scheme name	Site affected	Location
A483 Welshpool bypass	Archaeological	Sarn-y-Bryn Caled Castle Mound
A494 Mold bypass	Ancient Woodlands	Trebeirdd Woods Bryn Coch Bach

Every effort is made to minimise and mitigate the effects of road construction on such sites.

Child Psychotherapists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 90, if he will make it his policy to increase the number of child psychotherapists employed within the NHS in Wales to 20;

(2) what is his target for the number of child psychotherapists in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for employers to determine the staff required to meet the health care objectives of health authority and family health service authority health plans.

Skillcentres

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many skillcentres have been closed in each of the counties of Wales; and how many skillcentres remain open in each of the counties of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Skillcentres were privatised in 1990 and became the responsibility of the companies which purchased them. There are skillcentres in Clwyd (Wrexham), Gwent (Newport), south Glamorgan (Cardiff) and west Glamorgan (Port Talbot).

Freight Transport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the relative efficiencies of freight transport modes in Wales in terms of megajoules per tonne kilometre of (a) light goods vehicles using diesel, (b) light goods vehicles using petrol, (c) medium goods vehicles, (d) heavy goods vehicles, (e) rail bulk loads and (f) rail, general merchandise.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally. Figures on United Kingdom energy consumption by transport mode are given in "Transport Statistics: Great Britain 1992", a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been made available for projects in Wales in the current financial year under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969; how many projects have benefited; and how many jobs have been (i) created and (ii) preserved.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Wales tourist board has received £3·8 million in the current financial year to assist tourism schemes in Wales. During this year 227 projects have benefited, creating 142 jobs. In addition, 423 existing jobs are now more secure as a result of this year's assistance.

Health Authorities

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue a consultation paper on the possibility of uniting area health authorities and family health service authorites in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so at present. The merger of health authorities and family health services authorities in Wales would require primary legislation. However we encourage health authorities and family health services authorities to work together wherever possible, and there is already significant evidence of such co-operation, particularly in respect of strategic planning.

Speed Cameras

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to order the installation of speed cameras in the Wrexham area; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for consultation between the police, courts, the Crown prosecution service and the appropriate highway authority. The Department has no plans at present to install speed cameras on trunk roads in the Wrexham area.

Environmental Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the provision of training for teachers for the delivery of cross-curricular themes, with particular reference to the theme of environmental education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A number of national curriculum subjects include studies relevant to environmental education. We seek to ensure, through the criteria for the approval of courses, that initial training gives thorough preparation for teaching the national curriculum. We also provide specific grant to support national curriculum-related training for serving teachers. It is essentially for schools and local education authorities to determine what priority to give to particular subject areas.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the funding provided by Government Departments for the support of information services for environmental education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office supports information services for environmental education by a variety of means: directly by the Department through non-departmental public bodies with environmental responsibilities; and by supporting voluntary organisations through grant aid. Specific funding for information services is not separately identified.

Recycling

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he intends to take to promote actively the market in recycled products and to help local authorities, and others concerned, with meeting Government recycling targets.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The steps being taken are described in chapter 13 of "This Common Inheritance: The Second Year Report" (Cm 2068) a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to provide specific grants to local authorities to enable them to implement their recycling plans designed to meet the Government's target of recycling 25 per cent. of all household waste by the year 2000.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. There are long-standing arrangements agreed with the local authority associations in Wales under which they assess the level of provision needed to support a range of services, including recycling of waste, provided by local government. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State takes account of that assessment when deciding how much central Government support should be made available, in total, to local authorities. Most of that support, both revenue and capital, is distributed to authorities on the basis of formulae agreed with the Welsh local authority associations.

Council Tax

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the issue of draft valuation lists for council tax purposes.

Mr. David Hunt: Billing authorities in Wales have today received copies of the council tax draft valuation lists from the Valuation Office Agency. The valuation lists include valuations for some 1,212,230 dwellings. The number and distribution of dwellings between each council tax band is summarised by billing authority in the tables.

Valuations have been made on the basis of the price, subject to certain assumptions, which dwellings could have fetched had they been sold on 1 April 1991. The valuations were carried out between December 1991 and July 1992. The Valuation Office Agency which was responsible for the valuation exercise, was assisted in its task by private sector valuers.

Members of the public will be able to inspect the valuation list for their district at district council offices.

Cadw

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secreatary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 28 October, Official Report column 70, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the chief executive of Cadw's visits to (a) the United States in December 1991, and (b) Romania in September 1992.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Cadw—Welsh Historic Monuments—under its chief executive, Mr. John Carr. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. A. J. Carr to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 25 November 1992.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question which asked what costs there had been to the Exchequer of my visits to the United States and Romania in 1991 and 1992 respectively.

My visit to the United States was associated with a Wales Tourist Board marketing initiative—"Wise Wales". The cost of my participation in this was £457.

My visit to Romania was as the UK representative at a Council of Europe seminar designed to offer advice to the Romanian authorities on measures to conserve and present the remains of that country's built heritage. The cost of this visit was £470·00 which was met by the Council of Europe.

[1] Most of the regulations made by DHSS since the last General Election are amendment or technical regulations which do not increase the total regulatory burden on business.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April.

Mr. Atkins: The impact on business and members of the public is taken into account in assessing any proposals for changes in policy and procedures. Moreover, the scope for deregulation and simplication is kept under constant review in Northern Ireland Departments. The following are the main measures of deregulation or simplication of regulation which have been carried out in Northern Ireland since the last general election:

DED.
Quarries (Metrication) Regulations (NI) 1992 No. 216
Health and Safety (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Factories Metrication etc.) Regulations (NI) 1992 No. 461.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (a) the number of establishments covered by wages councils and (b) the number of employees covered by each wages council, giving the information for the latest available date.

Mr. Atkins: The numbers of establishments and employees covered by each wages council in Northern Ireland at 31 December 1991 are as follows:

Recycling

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to encourage the newspaper and textile industries to promote and participate in recycling schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The newspaper industry in Northern Ireland already uses recycled material in its production and places newspaper material into the recycling stream. In 1991, following discussions with the Government, the Newspaper Publishers Association agreed to aim to increase the proportion of waste paper used in newsprint consumed in the United Kingdom to at least 40 per cent. by the year 2000.

Plans are in hand to promote recycling and the use of recycled materials amongst business and industry in Northern Ireland and I intend to announce new legislative proposals next year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to raise, as president of European political co-operation, the status of European Community member states' sensitive technology exports to Iraq at the next EPC meeting.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The member states of the European Community in political co-operation regularly discuss issues concerning the control of exports of sensitive technologies. They do not make such exports to Iraq which is under comprehensive, mandatory sanctions imposed by the UN Security Council.

Western Sahara

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the continued occupation by Morocco of western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN Secretary-General's special representative is continuing his talks on the implementation of the UN settlement plan for the western Sahara. We are giving our full support to those efforts.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the United Nations proposals for a referendum in western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Although some progress has been made, there are still differences over eligibility to vote in the referendum. The UN Secretary-General's special representative has arranged a meeting with tribal chiefs of the western Sahara in Geneva on 30 November to 1 December to see if some of these problems can be overcome.

UNESCO

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the United Kingdom has to make an application to rejoin UNESCO.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to monitor carefully progress at UNESCO. There are no plans at present to apply to rejoin the organisation, but we shall keep the situation under review.

Saharaic Arab Democratic Republic

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to meet Mohammed Abdelaziz, president of the Saharaic Arab Democratic Republic during his visit to London.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Mr. Mohammed Abdelaziz will meet a senior official at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Tunisia

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 November, Official Report, column 546, what was the substance of the discussions between his Department and representatives of the Tunisian Government on the question of human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most recent occasion on which we have discussed human rights with the Tunisian Government was in October when our ambassador in Tunis led an EC troika delegation at a meeting with the Tunisian deputy Foreign Minister. This was an opportunity for a wide-ranging discussion on human rights and democracy. The troika drew attention to the declaration issued at the Lisbon European Council on relations with the Maghreb. This declaration underlines the importance the EC attaches to respect for human rights.

Hong Kong

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the exchange of letters between the British Government and the Chinese Government prior to the adoption by the Chinese National People's Congress of the Basic Law for Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: The relevant exchange of letters was published by the British and Chinese Governments on 28 October. A copy of the exchange has been deposited in the Library of the House.

Bosnia

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 452, if he will list the posts closest to Bosnia and Slovenia where visa applications can be made for entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our embassy at Belgrade provides a limited visa-issuing service—for example, to those seeking entry to the United Kingdom on urgent medical or compassionate grounds, and spouses and close family of British citizens.

We plan to provide a visa service at our embassy in Zagreb in Croatia as soon as practical problems including accommodation have been sorted out. As our enbassy in Ljubljana in Slovenia is currently operating out of an hotel, we have no plans, at present, to provide a visa service there.

Our posts in Budapest, Vienna, Sofia, Rome, Florence and Milan all provide visa services. Applications can be made by mail.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the 18-month-old constituent of the hon. Member for Woolwich who is HIV positive with AIDS-related symptoms, for whom an attendance allowance claim was made on 20 January.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter to Mr. John Austin-Walker from Mr. Michael Bichard, dated 26 November 1992.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the representations received concerning your 18 month old constituent for whom an Attendance Allowance (AA) claim was made on 20 January.

I can confirm that an adjudication officer on the Disability Living Allowance (DLA) Unit has now considered your constituent's claim and the decision was notified to the child's mother on 24 October. I replied on 24 November to your letter of 1 October to the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People and this explains the position in greater detail.

I offer my sincere apologies and regret for the delay your constituent has experienced and clearly on this occasion the family have not received the standard of service which they have every right to expect from the Benefits Agency.

As you are aware, from 6 April DLA replaced and extended both AA and Mobility Allowance for people disabled before the age of 65. I wrote to all MPs on 19 October explaining in detail the significant problems encountered with the launch of DLA and the measures introduced to deal with the backlog which resulted.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to ensure that a member of staff within the main disability living allowance unit in Blackpool is able to deal with inquiries from Welsh speakers in the Welsh language.

Mr. Scott: The provision of customer service at the disability living allowance unit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd from Mr. Michael Bichard, dated 26 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking whether it will become policy to ensure that a member of staff within the main Disability Living Allowance (DLA) Unit in Blackpool is able to deal with enquiries from Welsh Speakers in the Welsh language.

There are no arrangements for a specific member of staff in the DLA unit in Blackpool to deal with such enquiries. However, there are alternatives which ensure that Welsh speaking customers are given a service which ensures that they can use the Welsh language if they choose.

The Cardiff Disability Benefits Centre (DBC) deals with initial DLA claims from Welsh customers and has a Welsh speaker in its Customer Service Section. There is a telephone freeline available in Welsh which can provide free advice and help on all benefit matters including DLA. Within Wales all Districts operate a bilingual policy and the Agency has a Welsh Language and Media Unit.

If a customer contacts the DLA Unit in Blackpool we are able to offer a Welsh translation service for written communications. Telephone inquiries cannot be handled in Welsh but the customer can be referred to the Welsh Free Line, as can enquirers of the free Benefit Enquiry Line. Welsh Language versions of the DLA claim pack and a leaflet covering DLA are available and both are updated regularly.

Should there be a particular case which is causing you concern, please let me know and I will be happy to look into it further.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Social Fund, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the definitions of the high, medium and low-priority groups in use in the Newcastle area for grants and loans within the social fund in April and at the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter to Mr. Jim Cousins from Mr. Michael Bichard, dated 26 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund priorities in Newcastle.

Social Fund Officers (SFOs) decide the overall priority of individual applications by looking at all the circumstances of the case. They are obliged to take account of guidance issued by the Secretary of State for Social Security, and by the District Manager acting as Area Social Fund Officer (ASFO).

Guidance on priorities issued by the Secretary of State is in the Social Fund Guide which is in the Library.

The ASFO is required to provide guidance as to what priority should generally be afforded to certain categories of items, or in the case of grants, circumstances. The guidance is drafted so as not to interfere with the SFO's duty to consider the priority of individual items in light of the particular circumstances of the applicant. As the ASFO only suggests levels of priority in his guidance, it follows that there can be no definition of priorities as such.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to promote new EC legislation on the transferability of occupational pensions during the Government's presidency of the European Commission.

Miss Widdecombe: During the United Kingdom presidency of the Council of Ministers we have tabled a resolution which, if adopted by the Council, seeks the implementation of measures which recognise that workers should be able to move between member states without undue loss of occupational pension rights. The resolution gives as examples of methods by which rights may be protected, both preservation and revaluation in the member's existing scheme, and transfers to a scheme in the other member state.

The resolution calls on member states to investigate whether other obstacles to the mobility of workers existing in the occupational pensions field and, if so, how they can be removed. It calls on the Commission to report on measures taken by member states and to consider whether further action is required.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made for the take-up and cost to the Exchequer of the proposed 1 per cent. additional rebate for personal pension holders in 1993-94 and for subsequent years; and if he will publish figures separately for (a) people who already have an appropriate personal pension, (b) people newly contracting out into a personal pension scheme, (c) men and (d) women.

Miss Widdecombe: This measure, which will cost the national insurance fund an estimated £165 million in 1994-95 will benefit in the region of 2 million appropriate personal pension holders aged 30 and over. There is nil cost in 1993-94 because payments are made after the end of the relevant tax year. The 2 million holders are estimated to comprise 1·5 million men at a cost of £135 million and 0·5 million women at a cost of £30 million. The cost and split between men and women are estimated to be broadly similar in subsequent years until a new rebate structure is implemented. This is expected to be in 1996-97.

The measure is designed to ensure that appropriate personal pensions remain attractive across the age range for the majority of current holders. We anticipate that in the relevant years there will continue to be about 5 million appropriate personal pension holders.

National Insurance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of social security expenditure was met by national insurance contributions for each year since 1979; what are the planned figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if he will make a statement about future trends.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is in the table.

3. Income to the National Insurance Fund comes from several sources, predominantly employers' and employees' National Insurance Contributions, investment income and in certain years a Treasury Supplement.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the surplus or deficit in the national insurance fund for each financial year since 1979; and what is his estimate for the current year and for 1993-94.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which benefits have been transferred since 1979 to the consolidated fund from the national insurance fund.

Miss Widdecombe: Expenditure on industrial injuries benefits was transferred to the consolidated fund from 1 April 1990. Additionally, from that date new arrangements were introduced whereby the costs of statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay were reimbursed to the national insurance fund from the consolidated fund.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what saving for the national insurance fund has been achieved by transferring out expenditure on each benefit transferred to the consolidated fund, in each year since 1979 in cash terms and as a percentage of the national insurance fund; and what are the corresponding estimates for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the table:

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what sums have ben paid for each of the years since 1979 from general taxation into the national insurance fund, expressed in cash terms and as a percentage of the national insurance fund, and for what reasons in each case.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the table.

Christmas Bonus

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) Official Report, columns 367-68, on the subject of the Christmas bonus, what are the differences in calculation resulting in different figures in his answer and in a letter to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecoombe), dated 23 November.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures quoted in my reply of 19 November to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) at columns 367-68, reflected the level of the Christmas bonus if it had been increased annually in line with prices since 1974. The figures given in my letter to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford reflected the level if the bonus had been increased annually in line with prices since 1972.

HEALTH

Column Ozone

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research work is currently undertaken by her Department on the effect of sustained decreases of total column ozone upon levels of non-melanoma skin cancers and eye cataracts.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 19 October at column 80. Ultraviolet radiation (UV) monitoring undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) has indicated no significant departures from the expected norms since measurements began in 1988. The Medical Research Council is currently conducting basic research into the mechanisms of UV related carcinogenesis. In addition, the NRPB has established an advisory group to examine the scientific literature on health hazards from UV. The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) proposes to give advice on further research needs once the NRPB advisory group has reported.

St. George's Hospital, Tooting

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many registered general nurses have recently passed their examinations at St. George's hospital, Tooting; and how many have been offered employment as nurses at that hospital;

(2) what was the number of nursing vacancies at St. George's hospital, Tooting, on 16 November.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Dr. Enid Vincent, the chairman of Wandsworth health authority, for details.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which her Department has responsibility, which her Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April;

(2) if she will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which her Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April;

(3) which Minister in her Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of her Department.

Mr. Sackville: I have responsibility for the oversight of deregulation issues.

From April 1992, a new simplified application procedure for the change of ownership of a medicinal product licence has been in place. Although there have been no other significant deregulatory measures, in considering new proposals, the Department—where appropriate—reviews the regulatory burdens that might be placed on businesses to ensure that they are strictly proportionate in perceived risks.

There have been no measures increasing the regulatory burden on businesses since April.

Clinical Performance

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the variation in clinical performance in relation to a range of treatments among different hospitals, units and clinicians; and whether she will make available the evidence for publication.

Dr. Mawhinney: Each year the Department publishes a set of health service indicators which provide comparative information on a wide range of health service activities within each health authority in England. The indicator set contains data on a selected range of clinical treatments within each authority and this information is discussed with regional health authorities in the context of preparing and implementing the annual corporate contracts. The health service indicators are made available free to every health authority and a set is placed each year in the Library.

Community Health Councils

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to undertake a review of the role of community health councils.

Dr. Mawhinney: Community health councils have been given an important role in enabling the public interest to be represented in relation to local national health service services. How that role can best be fulfilled continues to be the subject of consideration at local, regional, and national level.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 30 October, Official Report, columns 943-44, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the director and chief executive of the Medicines Control Agency's visit to Washington, USA on 18 May.

Dr. Mawhinney: The administration of the Medicines Control Agency is a matter for its chief executive, Dr. Keith Jones. I have asked the chief executive to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter to Mr. Martin Redmond from Dr. K. Jones, dated 27 November 1992.

The Secretary of State for Health will have advised that your recent Parliamentary Question will be answered directly by the Chief Executive of the relevant agency. I give below the response for the Medicines Control Agency:

The Medicines Control Agency is funded by fees paid by applicants for product and other licences and from current licence holders. There was, therefore, no cost to the exchequer from my visit to Washington in May.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the contributions made in the public consultation exercise run by Yorkshire regional health authority concerning the proposed merger of Kirklees, Dewsbury and Calderdale health authorities into one new health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to do so. We shall however take all comments into account before reaching a decision on this proposal and when this is announced set out fully the reasons for the conclusions.

Youth Care Services

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment the Government have made of the quality of services provided to young people in the care of local authorities;

(2) what monitoring work is being undertaken on provision made under sections 20 to 26 of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's report on the first year of the Children Act 1989 is due to be presented to Parliament early in 1993 and will refer to services under sections 20 to 26.

As part of our strategy for monitoring the Act, we are collecting information covering children looked after by local authorities under section 20.

The Department's research programme includes studies covering the implementation of the requirements of section 20 regarding provision of accommodation and section 24 on preparing children for leaving care and supporting them after they have left. The studies will identify policies and practices which are supportive to young people leaving care.

The social services inspectorate is currently planning inspections of services for children in need and children with disabilities, and on representations and complaints procedures.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the interdepartmental review of health and social services for mentally disordered offenders and others requiring similar services.

Mr. Yeo: The steering committee, chaired by Dr. John Reed, completed the review on schedule in July 1992. Earlier progress reports were made by my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) in his reply of 13 November 1991 at columns 583-84 to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) and in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 2 June 1992 at columns 453-54.

We have already published nine consultation documents from the steering committee about the various issues considered in the review. The general direction proposed in these has been widely supported. The steering committee's final summary report, setting out the main conclusions it has reached, is published today and has been placed in the Library. The earlier consultative reports will be published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in four volumes next month. The Departments are also making widely available a digest of some of the issues and initiatives identified during visits to local services.

In parallel with the final summary report we are issuing for consultation the report of an official working group on services for offenders with learning disabilities or autism and a discussion paper on racial and cultural issues. These are also available in the Library.

In the course of the review, the Government have reaffirmed that mentally disordered offenders who need care and treatment should receive it from health and personal social services rather than in the criminal justice system. We have also endorsed a series of guiding principles which point in particular to services being provided, as far as is compatible with public safety, in more local and less institutional settings. As the final report makes clear, one of the keys to achieving this is joint working between the different agencies concerned at all levels.

Progress in many places has been stimulated both by the review itself and by the earlier Home Office circular 66/90 which gave advice on practical ways of diverting mentally disordered people from the criminal justice system and avoiding prosecution. We have identified mental illness as a key area in the White Paper "The Health of the Nation" (Cm 1986). This requires health authorities to include mentally disordered offenders in their strategic and purchasing plans. Regional directors of public health have now carried out initial assessments of needs and these will be developed in subsequent years. We are also spending £18 million this year on capital development of medium secure psychiatric units, against only £3 million in 1991-92.

We shall be considering carefully the recommendations set out in the final report, including their resource implications and other factors bearing on the possible pace of development. Much progress can be achieved by better use of existing services and resources and improved co-ordination between the responsible agencies. The protection afforded to health services for mentally disordered offenders, including those for patients with special needs, by NHS management executive letter (92)6 remains in force at least until March 1993. We are considering what steps should be taken to ensure an adequate level of services beyond that date.

To help in following up the review, and in maintaining the good co-operation between agencies which it has fostered, we are establishing a new advisory committee on mentally disordered offenders. This is being formed for three years with the following terms of reference:

> To advise the Department of Health and the Home Office on matters referred to it in connection with the provision and co-ordination of services for mentally disordered offenders and others requiring similar services, with particular reference to follow up action on the report of the joint departmental review of services; and to provide advice to the two departments on related issues which are referred to it.

The membership of the committee will be announced shortly.

We have already announced the establishment of two further advisory groups, also under Dr. Reed's chairmanship, to look at high security and related psychiatric provision and at the needs of people with psychopathic or personality disorder. These groups will be reporting in the early part of 1993.

My right hon. and hon. Friends and I believe that this review has made a major contribution to raising the service profile of mentally disordered offenders. We should like to renew our thanks to Dr. Reed and all those who have worked with him.

NHS Blood Services

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has reached a decision on the future management structure for the NHS blood services.

Mr. Sackville: Following a review we have decided to bring together responsibility for managing all parts of the national health service blood services in England into a single national blood authority (NBA). I shall lay an order in due course to establish the new authority. From 1 April 1993 it will replace the existing Central Blood Laboratories Authority and the National Directorate of the National Blood Transfusion Service; and subsequently will assume responsibility for managing the regional transfusion centres at the earliest opportunity.

The key objectives of the NBA will be:

to maintain and promote blood and blood product supply based on our outstanding system of voluntary unpaid donors;

to implement a cost-effective national strategy for ensuring an adequate supply of blood and blood products to meet national needs;

to ensure that high standards of safety and quality in the blood supply are maintained throughout the blood services;

to ensure that blood products meet a consistent standard of safety and quality;

to ensure the cost efficient operation of the Transfusion Centres and the Bio Products Laboratory both individually and together as parts of the national service.

Our blood supply is of high quality and among the safest in the world. We believe that the new management structure will enable the blood service to maintain and improve on those high standards and to enhance its operations so that the blood freely donated by our volunteer donors can be used most effectively in the interests of patients.

I am pleased to announce that Sir Colin Walker, deputy chairman Central Blood Laboratories Authority, has agreed to serve also as the chairman of the new national blood authority when it is set up. Further appointments will be announced later.

Coventry Ambulance Service

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 451-52, if she will now give figures for (a) total emergency cases, (b) the percentage where the response was within eight minutes and (c) the percentage where the response was within 20 minutes, for the ambulance service in Coventry for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Sackville: Information by district in the west midlands is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir James Ackers, the chairman of West Midlands regional health authority, for details.

NHS Review

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 503, what is the name of the management consultants being used in the current review of her Department's requirement for information from the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Touche Ross management consultants.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of the KPMG Peat Marwick report on the proposal to close hospitals in the South Birmingham health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: Publication of the KPMG Peat Marwick report is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she was informed of the proposed establishment of financial information packages from West Midlands regional health authority; and what advice her Department gave about the framework for the new company.

Dr. Mawhinney: This Department and West Midlands regional health authority jointly funded what was known as the financial information project during the 1980s. The Department was not involved in the arrangements in 1990 by the West Midlands regional health authority to evolve the project into FIP health or in the association of that company with a charitable body known as the health management trust other than to advise on the granting of licences of the crown copyright systems software.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will cut the payments made to financial information packages by West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The question of payments to Financial Information Project Systems Ltd. is currently under investigation.

Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was per capita spending on health and personal social services in cash terms and at current prices for each year since 1979 for (a) all ages, (b) births, (c) zero to four years, (d) five to 15 years, (e) 16 to 64 years, (f) 65 to 74 years and (g) 75 years and over; and how much in each case was spent on (i) hospital and community health services, (ii) family practitioner services, (iii) personal social services and (iv) in total in England.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 November 1992:] Estimates of spending per head by age group for the personal social services and for the family health services are not now produced every year. The latest available are shown in the table.

Estimates for the hospital and community health services are still produced annually, but as a result of changes in data sources, definitions and the methodology used, comparable figures for a series of years cannot be produced. The latest estimates are also shown in the table.

Health Services (Demand)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most recently available estimates of the percentage changes in demand on the hospital and community health services due to demographic change for each year from 1972-73 to 1996-97.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 November 1992]: The table estimates the change in the level of resources required each year, as a result of changes in the age structure of the population of England, to maintain hospital and community health services at constant levels per head. Figures prior to 1975-76 are not available. The figure for 1993-94, 0·5 per cent., compares with the estimated increase of at least 2·5 per cent. in hospital and community health activity which we expect the national health service to achieve as a result of the additional funding announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

TRANSPORT

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Norris: I am.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since the last general election.

Mr. Norris: Since the general election, we have carried out a number of measures of deregulation, including the deregulation of motorway service areas; and European Community measures on liberalising international coach services, international road haulage and road passenger cabotage services.

In air transport, the Government have been enthusiastic supporters of the EC's third package of aviation measures, establishing a single market in aviation form 1 January 1993. From that date, airlines meeting safety, common financial fitness and EC nationality and effective control criteria will be entitled to an operating licence giving unrestricted access to most intra-Community routes; and there will be free setting of air fares, subject to safeguards against predatory and excessive pricing.

Agreement has also been reached in principle on a regulation liberalising shipping cabotage services throughout the European Community.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has recently announced proposals which would give local authorities greater discretion in setting speed limits on local roads. In particular, it is proposed that local authorities would no longer need the Secretary of State's consent before establishing a speed limit on a principal road.

We intend shortly to lay regulations before Parliament to allow right of access to the railway network to certain international services, in order to implement EC directive 91/440; and to introduce legislation at the earliest practicable opportunity to extend the benefits of deregulation to bus services in London.

Jubilee Line

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is now the expected timescale for the commencement of work on the extension of the Jubilee line?

Mr. Norris: I cannot speculate on the time scale in advance of the conclusion of a formal agreement on the terms on which the administrators of Olympia and York is to make its contribution.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My Department's property managers are advised to ensure that all plant and equipment is properly maintained and regularly serviced in accordance with the manufacturer's specification, legal requirements and professional advice on best practice. This includes air conditioning and refrigeration equipment.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Plant and equipment in my Department are managed locally. The Department is appointing a network of professional advisers to help property managers check plant and equipment and to draw up forward maintenance programmes. This will include measures to replace ozone-depleting substances as soon as possible, having regard to legal requirements and advice on best practice. Property managers will be encouraged to set and monitor targets locally, taking account of the actual equipment and substances in use, the alternatives available and the opportunities for recycling.

Women Passengers

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures have been taken within the last five years to improve the safety of women using public transport in London.

Mr. Norris: Safety for all their customers is the top priority of British Rail and London Transport. Over the last five years they have introduced a number of measures to make services safer and more secure. On BR and London Underground these include the provision of closed circuit television and improved lighting at stations, in subways and at station car parks, mirrors to see around corners and helppoints on underground platforms. London Buses Ltd. has introduced two-way radios and assault klaxons and it is in the process of installing video cameras. BR and London Underground Ltd. work in close liaison with the British Transport police, and London Buses Ltd. with the Metropolitan police, whose officers make regular patrols of premises and vehicles. In conjunction with the Suzy Lamplugh trust, an organisation dedicated to reducing risks to the personal safety of women, transport operators and the British Transport police, my Department has published a leaflet entitled "Travel Safely by Public Transport".

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for the future of British Rail's strategy entitled "Organising for Quality" following privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: "Organising for Quality" has brought a more commercial approach to the organisation and management of the railway but within the constraints of a nationalised industry. The Government's proposals in "New Opportunities for the Railways" (Cm 2012) will take this process further by introducing more competition, greater efficiency and a wider choice of services more closely tailored to what customers want.

Freight Transport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what specific targets have been established by his Department for the development of combined freight transport schemes in the United Kingdom up until the year 2000.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 23 November, at column 562. The Department does not set such targets. The development of combined freight transport is a commercial matter for individual operators.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for South Hams of early November, about the VAT surcharge levied on Western Approaches Yachts; and what instructions his officials have with regard to penalties for small businesses.

Sir John Cope: Customs has been asked to look into the points my hon. Friend raised in his letter of 10 November and a reply will be sent as soon as its inquiries are completed.

Customs applies the law on VAT penalties, subject in appropriate cases to appeal to VAT tribunals or the courts, and with due regard to the reports of the Public Accounts Committee.

EC Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lamont: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Brussels under my chairmanship on 23 November. The Paymaster General represented the United Kingdom.

A national programme for economic convergence submitted by Belgium was discussed. The Council commended Belgium's record of price and monetary stability but concluded that fiscal consolidation was the key requirement in the conduct of Belgium's economic policy. The Council therefore welcomed the multi-annual measures which the Belgian Government have set in place and their new commitment to continue to reduce their debt ratio after 1996.

The Council held a useful discussion about the future financing of the Community. Along with the United Kingdom, many member states continued to argue that the Commission's compromise proposals still involved unacceptable increases in expenditure. We also made it clear that the United Kingdom would not accept any adverse change to the abatement.

Sir Leon Brittan gave the Council a short outline of the Commission's proposals for changes in the EC legislative framework for banking supervision in the light of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International case.

Over lunch, the Council discussed the economic situation in the Community. I announced that there would be a full discussion of economic issues at the European Council and that consideration should be given to the measures which member states can take, both individually and collectively, to hasten economic recovery.

The Council also reached a political agreement on the investment services directive, the remaining financial services measure from the single market programme. All the Government's negotiating objectives were met concerning the outstanding issues which were discussed. The directive will offer worthwhile opportunities for the British financial services sector.

The report of the high-level group on fraud, set up at the United Kingdom's initiative, was also adopted and welcomed as containing useful proposals which would improve the effectiveness of measures to counter fraud in the Community.

Subject to reserves from Denmark and Germany, the Council also agreed to increase travellers' allowances so that travellers arriving from outside the Community will be able to bring in goods to a value of 175 ecu without incurring further tax; and that the amount for goods that tax-free shops can sell VAT free to travellers within the EC is restricted to the value of 90 ecu. Again, this was the welcome result of a United Kingdom initiative.

The excise simplification directive was also agreed subject to a German scrutiny reserve and final modifications to the text in the jurist/linguists group. Officials were urged to resolve the remaining issues for agreement in the VAT simplification directive. It was agreed that the 7th VAT directive should be discussed at the next meeting of ECOFIN on 14 December. Meanwhile the United Kingdom made it clear that we could not agree to the current proposals for VAT on works of art at import.

The taxation of road transport was also discussed as part of a package of proposals to liberalise road transport which will also be discussed at the Transport Council on 7 December. It was agreed that ECOFIN should return to this issue on 14 December.

Finally, the Council agreed, without further discussion, balance of payments loans to the Baltic states and Council conclusions on the Ruding report on corporate taxation. The latter emphasised importance of subsidiarity in this area and also identified a number of further criteria which need to be considered before any action is proposed.

These conclusions are a valuable step forward and establish an acceptable framework for future consideration of corporate tax issues in the Community.

Windsor Castle

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimate of (a) the annual cost of insuring Windsor castle against fire, (b) the annual cost of insuring the contents of Windsor castle against fire damage, (c) the cost of insuring all Government-owned buildings against fire damage, (d) the cost of insuring the contents of all Government-owned buildings against fire damage and (e) what was the cost of (i) repairing such buildings and (ii) repairing and replacing the contents of such buildings in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lamont: Estimates of the insurance costs are not available. There is no central record of losses but the value of losses due to fire reported by Departments to the Treasury during a review of Government insurance arrangements in 1991 was:

£ million

Year	Value
1985-86	14·4
1986-87	3·4
1987-88	181·3
1988-89	0·8
1989-90	4·7

The 1987-88 figure includes a sum of £180·1 million relating to a single major fire at a Ministry of Defence depot. The figures do not include losses in respect of incidents costing less than £100,000 at Ministry of Defence establishments.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue the Government derived from VAT on imported tropical timber in 1991.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 26 November 1992]: Not all tropical timbers are separately identified in the Customs tariff which is the basis of available statistics.

Calculations based on the value of imports of identifiable tropical timber recorded during 1991 show that the amount of VAT payable was approximately £25 million.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has for proceeds from the national lottery to be made available to community sports programmes.

Mr. Brooke: As the White Paper "A National Lottery: Raising Money for Good Causes" stated, it is intended that the proceeds of the national lottery will benefit a number of areas, including sport. Responsibilities and arrangements for the distribution of national lottery proceeds will be set out in the Bill which I hope to introduce soon.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will estimate how much it would cost to extend the television licensing concessionary scheme to make all housing schemes reserved for the exclusive use of retired tenants eligible for the concessionary licence rate.

Mr. Brooke: The cost of extending the concessaionry television licence scheme to all housing schemes provided specifically for retired tenants is estimated to be around £25 million in lost licence fee revenue.

Hampton Court

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total cost to public funds arising from the restoration of Hampton Court; and what percentage this represented in terms of the total cost of restoration.

Mr. Brooke: I have asked the chief executive of the Historic Royal Palaces agency, Mr. David Beeton, to reply to the hon. Member and I shall place a copy of his reply in the Library.

Letter to Mr. Tony Banks from Mr. David Beeton, dated 26 November 1992:

The Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your Written Parliamentary Question asking the total cost to public funds arising from the restoration of Hampton Court Palace; and what percentage this represented in terms of the total cost of restoration.

The total cost of rebuilding the damaged part of Hampton Court Palace following the fire in 1986 was £10·4 million. A further £1·1 million was spent on redecorating and representing the restored interior. The latter sum was a commercial investment with a forecast return in excess of 8 per cent. per annum. In the four months since the State Apartments re-opened, that investment has yielded a return substantially in excess of 8 per cent.

The total cost of both elements was met from public funds.

Windsor Castle

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his estimate of the cost to Government funds arising from his undertaking to restore fully Windsor castle following the recent fire.

Mr. Brooke: An estimate will not be available until the damaged areas have been surveyed and plans for restoration have been prepared.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when fire safety precautions were last inspected at Windsor castle by authorities reporting to his office.

Mr. Brooke: The fire officer of PSA Building Management completed a report for the Department of the Environment on 7 January 1991 on those parts of Windsor castle not then subject to rewiring.

York Minster

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total cost to public funds arising from the restoration of York Minster following the fire; and what proportion this represented in terms of the total cost of restoration.

Mr. Brooke: The total cost of the restoration work to York Minster was £2·25 million. This was met in full by insurance, so there was no need for public expenditure.

ENVIRONMENT

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the contracts which since 1990 have been awarded to accountancy firms criticised by the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Howard: The three contracts let by my Department to the accountancy arms of firms criticised by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in reports published since the beginning of 1990 were awarded to Coopers and Lybrand or its successor Coopers Lybrand Deloitte. The work involved was as follows:

External audit of the Housing Corporation
Advice on privatisation of the PSA
External audit of the National Rivers Authority

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications for plutonium and spent fuel shipments of the environmental protection imperatives included in the "Agenda 21" document agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Maclean: Plutonium and spent fuel shipments are made only subject to stringent and internationally agreed standards. Such practice is wholly in accordance with the "Agenda 21" document agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April;

(2) if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April.

Mr. Redwood: Following a major review, new building regulations came into force on 1 June which completed the change from rigid mandatory rules to broad functional requirements. This, together with the revision of the associated technical guidance, allows greater freedom and a more flexible approach for designers and building control authorities. We have also issued, jointly with the Home Office, a new guide for fire safety and building regulations as part of a deregulation initiative to simplify procedures for building work to which the separate systems of building control and fire regulations apply.

A number of planning regulations have been introduced since the last general election to implement the Planning and Compensation Act 1991; they have replaced or updated previous controls or were broadly neutral in the mix of new controls and deregulation. In addition, two new regulations have been introduced—The Town and Planning (Demolition of Buildings) Direction 1992 and the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Regulations 1992—and a new deregulation measure—the Town and Planning (Simplified Planning Zones) Regulations 1992.

New statutory instruments are being made mainly in the course of implementing the Local Government Finance Act 1992 and in particular establishing the new council tax system. It is of course hoped that the new system will be simpler for authorities and for the public than the community charge system.

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) (No. 3) Regulations 1992 give temporary permission for local authorities to spend the whole of the capital receipts which they obtain between 13 November 1992 and 31 December 1993, subject to a few exceptions.

New licensing regulations governing the release of barn owls into the wild have been laid and will come into effect on 1 January 1993.

In addition, the Government have announced a change of approach with a new general presumption in favour of the use of economic instruments rather than the traditional regulation to deliver environmental goals.

Diesel Emissions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken by his Department upon the effect of diesel emissions on the soiling of building exteriors within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has commissioned research at Queen's university, Belfast and Middlesex university on the sources and mechanisms of soiling of building exteriors. Diesel smoke is recognised as a major contributory factor.

HCFCs and CFCs

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the latest information he has on the phasing out of the use of chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals Her Majesty's Government have to speed up the phasing out of hydrochlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The fourth meeting of parties to the Montreal protocol agreed on 25 November in Copenhagen to phase out CFCs by 1 January 1996, with an interim cut of 75 per cent. by 1 January 1994. It also agreed to freeze HCFC consumption from 1 January 1995 at a level of 3·1 per cent. of 11989 CFC consumption plus HCFC consumption in that year. This freeze will be followed by a 35 per cent. cut of that level by 1 January 2004; a 65 per cent. cut by 2010; a 90 per cent. cut by 2015; a 99·5 per cent. cut by 1 January 2020; and phase-out by 2030. A legal framework for control of applications of HCFCs was also agreed. The meeting also agreed to phase out carbon tetrachloride by 1 January 1996 with a 50 per cent. cut by 1 January 1995; methyl chloroform by 1 January 1996 with a 50 per cent. cut by 1 January 1994; and halons by 1 January 1994. Methyl bromide will be frozen at 1991 levels by 1 January 1995.

This agreement is good news for the ozone layer and, indeed, good news for the environment more generally. Industry has been given a clear signal. On CFCs and halons, companies which make or use refrigerators, solvents, air-conditioning and fire-fighting equipment must move fast, as the new controls will have a major impact in only 13 months time. I intend to take steps to ensure that the industry is aware of what needs to be done.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what uses of CFCs will be granted exemption and continued use permitted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Under the Montreal protocol as revised in Copenhagen this week, any essential use exemption for CFCs can be granted only on the basis of agreement by the parties to the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer, at its meeting in 1994.

Peat

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration has been given to inviting non-governmental organisations that have knowledge of the issues involved to be represented on his Department's working group on peat extraction and related matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary announced on 7 July 1992 in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson), Official Report, column 158, the working group includes representatives drawn from the statutory nature and countryside conservation bodies in Great Britain, mineral planning authorities, the peat industry and Government Departments; and it has at its disposal a comprehensive range of expertise. I recognise the knowledge of some of the non-governmental organisations on peat matters. They have been invited to submit views to the group and will be further consulted as the work progresses.

Water Quality

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of water quality samples in each of the EC member states passed (a) EC and (b) World Health Organisation standards for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: A total of 98·6 per cent. of tests carried out in the United Kingdom in 1991 complied with legal standards. These standards take account of WHO guidelines and the requirements of the EC drinking water directive. We do not hold information on compliance by other EC member states.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish and place in the Library in hard copy and in machine-readable form, as soon as possible after issuing his provisional capping criteria for 1993-94, a table showing for each authority its 1992-93 budget with and without adjustments for local authority functions the maximum possible 1993-94 budget permitted by his provisional capping criteria and the percentage changes between both versions of the 1992-93 budget and the maximum 1993-94 budget.

Mr. Howard: I shall shortly be placing in the Library in hard copy and machine-readable form a table showing each authority:

(a) its 1992-93 budget on the basis of the latest information available to me;
(b) the notional amount (ie the base from which to measure the budget increase for capping purposes) which I have proposed for it;

(c) an illustrative exemplification, on the basis of my proposals for notional amounts and the exemplifications of the proposed standard spending assessments (SSAs) which I have published in my consultation paper on the Settlement, showing the maximum 1993-94 budget which would not be excessive or represent an excessive increase under my provisional capping criteria; and

(d) comparisons between this maximum and its 1992-93 budget and proposed notional amount respectively.

It is not possible to calculate the maximum possible 1993-94 budgets permitted by my provisional criteria until final notional amounts have been specified and final standard spending assessments have been calculated, which will necessarily be after the notional amounts and the local government finance reports have been made and approved by the House.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish and place in the Library in hard copy and in machine-readable form, as soon as possible after issuing his proposals for transitional relief for 1993-94 council tax payers, a table showing for each authority the transitional relief scheme council tax liability for a property in band D with no discounts to be used to calculate the entitlement to transitional relief.

Mr. Howard: Scheme council taxes will be calculated by each billing authority depending on authorities' actual budget requirements. At this stage, no figures are therefore held centrally.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the draft valuation lists sent to billing authorities in England on 27 November.

Mr. Redwood: The draft valuation lists sent to billing authorities in England show the bandings of the 20,025,366 dwellings in England. The number of dwellings in each council tax band is given in the table. Information about the number of dwellings in each billing authority area and their distribution between bands has been placed in the Library.

Local taxpayers will be able to inspect draft lists at the principal office of billing authorities from next week. The lists will also be available for inspection at local offices of the Valuation Office agency.

The bandings are based on the capital value of dwellings had they been sold on 1 April 1991. The Valuation Office agency was responsible for the supervision of the valuation exercise and was assisted by private sector valuers. The valuation exercise was largely complete by July 1992, since when addresses have been validated by local authorities.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the funding provided by Government Departments for the support of information services for environmental education.

Mr. Maclean: My Department supports information services for environmental education by a variety of means: directly by the Department; through non-departmental public bodies with environmental responsibilities; and by supporting voluntary organisations through grant aid. Specific funding for information services is not separately identified.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the Ordnance Survey corporate plan for 1993 to 1997.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available to the trade union side of the Department of Environment (Central) Whitley council a copy of the "Survey of Staff Travel, Times and Costs" relating to the proposed move to docklands, which has been compiled by his Department.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 November 1992]: As my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 12 November at column 958, the Department of the Environment will remain in Marsham street for at least the next three years. The Department's consultants have yet to submit their final report on staff travel. When it is available, the results will be discussed with the trade union side.

There are a large number of distributors and retailers who may sell agricultural pesticides if the sale is carried out by a person holding a certificate of competence recognised by Ministers. These are not listed, but may sell pesticide products containing 2,4-D to the end user.

All pesticide products containing 2,4,5-T are in the process of being revoked. No such product may be used after 28 February 1993.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will specify the restrictions governing the sale and distribution of the pesticides 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: The sale and distribution of pesticide products containing 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D are subject to the general conditions which must be met when pesticides are advertised, sold, supplied, stored and used. These are consents made under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. The consents have been published in "Pesticides 1992" which is held in the House Library.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which Minister in his Department is responsible for oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Curry: The Parliamentary Secretary, the Earl Howe.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April.

Mr. Curry: The main measures of deregulation which my Department has carried out since the last general election are as follows:

Sheep Scab (Revocation) Order.
Restricting certification requirements for imports of medicated feedingstuffs only to those containing prescription only medicines.
Exemption for pet shopowners from the need to register their premises for the sale of medicated feed in retail pack sizes of 5 kg. or less.
Publication of Medicines Act Veterinary Information Services (MAVIS) newsletter.

Cattle (Transport)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 528-29, regarding the transport of cattle, what informal requests have been made by the Dutch authorities for the sealing of lorries carrying British cattle to Holland.

Mr. Soames: An informal approach has been made by the Dutch authorities for the sealing of vehicles transporting calves from Great Britain to Holland. No further consideration will be given to the request until it has been confirmed in writing.

CAP Pound

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the common agricultural policy pound to be devalued in line with the open market traded pound; and what effect he expects the transition to have on the price of butter measured from current levels.

Mr. Curry: New agrimonetary arrangements compatible with the single market are due to be put in place on 1 January 1993. Under the new system, the green exchange rates used to convert CAP support prices into sterling will be kept in line with market exchange rates. If the present exchange rate for sterling continues until the end of the year, a further green pound devaluation will be necessary, in addition to the 7 per cent. devaluation agreed at the Agriculture Council and the automatic devaluation of 2 per cent. resulting from the realignment within the exchange rate mechanism of 22 November. While the support price for butter will rise in line with these devaluations, the effect on the retail price for butter is likely to be much smaller. This is because retail prices will ultimately be determined by supply and demand conditions in the market and these will depend on the use of intervention, the relatively high level of commercial stocks and the fact that packaging and handling costs will not be directly affected by the devaluations.

Meat Trade

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new restrictions on trading cattle, calves or beef from the United Kingdom have been introduced by other European countries during 1992.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 23 November 1992]: During 1992 Poland and Czechoslovakia have notified new conditions covering a wide range of animal and public health guarantees for the importation of meat and meat products, including beef from Great Britain. In both cases, the conditions exceed those recommended by the Office Internationale des Epizooties and as such are restricting trade. Officials are currently negotiating with the veterinary authorities concerned to agree alternative conditions which will enable trade to resume.

DEFENCE

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State does not generally have responsibility for regulations which impact on the business community. However, a number of procedures within the Department have been revised to reduce the administrative burden on companies. In addition, we have recently undertaken, in consultation with the defence industry, an extensive review of our contracts procedures and a number of measures will be implemented which will have the same effect.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Aitken: I am.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April.

Mr. Aitken: No such measures have been put into effect.

Allivane International

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he possesses in regard to the sale of advanced 155 mm shells by Allivane International to the Yugoslavian Federal Directorate of Supply and Procurements in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Aitken: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on individual export licence applications.

National Parks

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all land in national parks where his Ministry has extended or significantly intensified military activity in each of the last five years; in which cases he has consulted with the local planning authority, Countryside Commission and national park authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all land in national parks surplus to defence requirements which has been released in each of the last five years; in each case if he will indicate what improvements there have been to public access; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ameliorate the effects of military activity in national parks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence attaches great importance to its declaration of commitment to the national parks and endeavours to promote the objectives of the park authorities wherever these are compatible with the needs of national defence.

Land and Buildings

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money was spent on purchasing land and buildings by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The amount spent by the Ministry of Defence on the purchase of land and buildings in each of the last five years was:

FY	£m
1991-92	21·201
1990-91	7·555
1989-90	29·266
1988-89	6·069
1987-88	6·032

Brecon Beacons National Park

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what agreement he has negotiated, or is currently negotiating, with the Cnewr estate in the Brecon

Beacons national park for the use of the land; whether the national park authority was consulted about these negotiations concerning that land; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has for the use of the Cnewr estate in the Brecon Beacons national park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Army has been using the Cnewr estate for adventurous training on an informal basis since 1976. The local defence land agent was approached by the trustees of the estate on 31 July 1992 with a view to putting arrangements on a more formal basis. These discussions are still at an early stage. The national park officer was informed on 22 September, when it was proposed that a meeting should take place between MOD, the national park and the estate.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for allowing public access to the Cnewr estate in the Brecon Beacons national park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Cnewr estate is privately owned and public access is not, therefore, a matter for the Ministry of Defence.

Ministry Land (Access)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations in each of the last five years where his Ministry has improved public access to his Ministry's land, giving the location, timing and nature of the improvement in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what liaison he has with (a) the Countryside Commission and (b) the Ramblers Association at a national, regional and local level concerning improving the right of access to land owned and leased by his Ministry.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence encourages public access to its land whenever possible. There is a well-established system of consultation with local parties interested in the countryside. We also have national level liaison with the Countryside Commission on a wide range of issues.

Land Sales

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list on a county basis in England, Scotland and Wales the land that his Department has sold, giving the name of the site, the number of hectares, to whom the land was sold and for how much, in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is not maintained in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Landscape Preservation and Access

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he proposes to his policy on landscape preservation and access as outlined in chapter 19 of his Ministry's document entitled "Environment Manual"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The policy on landscape preservation and acciss is kept under review. Chapter 19 of the MOD "Environment Manual" is changed as necessary.

Ministry Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the land that his Department has bought, giving the name in each county of England, Scotland and Wales of the site, the number of hectares, and for how much the land was bought, in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the future requirements of his Ministry of land required for military training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We continually assess our requirement for training land to ensure that we retain only that which is essential to meet our operational and training requirements.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many copies of his leaflet "Walks on Ministry of Defence Lands" have been published; at what cost; how they have been distributed to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since its launch on 21 May 1992, just over 155,000 copies of the leaflet "Walks on Ministry of Defence Lands" have been published at a total cost of £28,500, or 18p each.

Copies have been distributed to tourist information centres throughout the United Kingdom, public libraries, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, the Youth Hostels Association, national parks, tourist information offices, the Campaign for the Protection of Rural England, the National Council of YMCAs, the National Trust, the Royal Society for Nature Conservation, the Countryside Council, the Countryside Council for Wales, English Nature and the Ramblers Association. A further 48,000 copies of the leaflet were distributed with the August edition of the magazine "Country Walking". Copies were also distributed by the "Defence Into the 90s" exhibition tour and the Ministry of Defence stand "Defending the Environment" at the Royal show in Stoneleigh.

In addition, 8,000 leaflets have been despatched in response to specific requests. Finally, copies of the leaflet have been placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Estimates

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about progress he has made concerning his Department's contribution to the citizens charter following the publication of the Statement on Defence Estimates 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As was explained in the Statement on the Defence Estimates (Cm 1981, paragraphs 336 to 337), the Ministry of Defence does not provide any service direct to the public. The Department's principal response to the citizens charter is therefore the continued provision of a high standard of defence capability giving value for money to the tax payer. The performance and quality disciplines inherent in the new management strategy and in the formation of next steps agencies are however valuable tools through which the Department is seeking to improve the standard of the service it provides.

For examples of where the work of the Department is relevant to the citizens charter I refer the hon. Gentleman to the White Paper "Citizen's Charter First Report 1992" (Cm 2101), published on Wednesday 25 November 1992.

Reactor Cores

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current locations of the reactor cores from (i) HMS Sovereign, (ii) HMS Swiftsure and (iii) HMS Revenge.

Mr. Aitken: The reactor cores of HMS Sovereign and HMS Revenge remain contained on board the submarines. The core removed from HMS Swiftsure is stored ashore in containers authorised for this purpose.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the last reactor core was moved to Sellafield; and from where it was moved.

Mr. Aitken: The last nuclear reactor core moved to Sellafield was transferred from Rosyth. As the core was unirradiated, individual module transport containers, fully licensed by the Department of Transport, were able to be used for this transfer, which took place between July and September 1992.

Forces in Germany

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what respects the legal basis for stationing British forces in Germany has changed since German unification.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Ordnance Board

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the responsibilities of the Ordnance Board with regard to nuclear weapons; and what consideration he has given to changes in these responsibilities.

Mr. Aitken: The role of the Ordnance Board in respect of nuclear weapons is described in the MOD's chief scientific adviser's report on the safety of United Kingdom nuclear weapons, a copy of which is available in the Library. The hon. Member will be aware that the Ministry of Defence has accepted all of the recommendations in this report and is proceeding with their implementation.

Trident Safety Committee

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role and function of the Trident safety committee; when it was established; how many personnel are assigned to it; and what is its annual budget.

Mr. Aitken: The Trident safety committee is an internal committee which supports the director general strategic weapon systems in discharging his specific responsibilities in relation to the safety of the Trident II strategic weapon system. It was established in its present form in 1988. The committee has two full-time staff and draws on about 15 others. The total annual staff costs associated with the committee's work are in the order of £400,000.

Polaris

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has commissioned in the United States of America in the last five years on the disposal of Polaris missiles and their components.

Mr. Aitken: As part of normal business under the Polaris sales agreement, my Department obtains advice and guidance from the United States authorities on all aspects of the disposal of Polaris missiles and their components.

Rosyth Dry Dock

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when RD46 dry dock at Rosyth is expected to become operational.

Mr. Aitken: RD46 became operational on 24 November 1992.

Defence Contractors

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many former officials of his Department have taken up gainful employment with defence contractors during the past three years.

Mr. Aitken: A total of 285 serving or former civil servants have applied, under the Government's business appointment rules, to take up paid employment with defence contractors since January 1990. In the same period 268 members of the armed forces have similarly applied under the rules. Applicants are not required to advise whether, in the event, employment was taken up.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what record is kept of former members of the armed services taking up gainful employment with companies supplying his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Records are maintained of all applications received from members of the armed forces and civil servants wishing to take up paid employment outside Crown service under the Government's business appointment rules. The rules do not require applicants to advise whether, in the event, employment was taken up.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Video Duplication

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures the Government are taking to stop the infringement of copyright by illegal video duplication.

Mr. Leigh: The Copyright, Designs and Patents Act (1988) provides for significant criminal penalties for those who make or sell unauthorised copies of audiovisual works, and makes it clear that this is also a civil offence. It is for the police themselves to determine the priority they give to the investigation of particular criminal offences. It is open to copyright owners to take civil action to enforce their rights. The Patent Office is active in the creation of awareness of the existence of rights subsisting in these works by widespread dissemination of promotional literature and the marketing of an audiovisual aid.

Intellectual Property Contracts

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring forward proposals for legislation to restrict the powers of United Kingdom companies to enter into intellectual property contracts with offshore companies and to increase the level of supervision of such contracts.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to bring forward proposals for legislation to restrict the powers of United Kingdom companies to enter into contracts concerning intellectual property, or to supervise such contracts.

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what monitoring his Department carries out of intellectual property contracts with offshore companies entered into by United Kingdom companies; what estimate he has made of the effect of such contracts on the conduct of pension funds and life assurance funds; what provisions exist as to the role of auditors in such cases; if he will list companies known to have been involved; and if he will make a statement on the role of supervisory bodies in these circumstances.

Mr. Leigh: My Department does not monitor contracts concerning intellectual property entered into by United Kingdom companies or their effects on pension and life assurance funds. Auditors' activities are governed by company law.

Pit Closures

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what terms of reference were given to J. T. Boyd Company for its present consultancy work; when work commenced; when he expects it will be completed; at what estimated cost; if he will place a copy of the completed report in the Library; and if the consultancy work was put out to tender.

Mr. Eggar: Regarding the terms of reference, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 20 November at column 433. Boyds commenced work on 28 October 1992 and is expected to submit its final report early in the new year. The completed report will be published and a copy will be placed in the Library. On the remaining points, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Cummings) on 24 November at column 611.

Post Bus Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post bus services have existed, and what route mileage they have covered, in each year since 1989.

Mr. Leigh: The number of post bus services and their route mileage in each year since 1989 are as follows:

As at	Routes	Miles (millions)
April 1989	170	3·40
April 1990	172	3·45
April 1991	173	3·50
April 1992	179	3·75

Pension Funds

Mr. Sims: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many instances of alleged irregularities in the administration of company pension funds have been drawn to the attention of his Department in the last 12 months; what investigations in respect of these allegations are in progress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There have been four instances in the past 12 months where complaints have included such allegations, but I cannot provide any further detail for reasons of confidentiality. I should make it clear, however, that my Department's powers under the Companies Act are confined to the investigation of companies themselves—they do not extend to examining the affairs of any pension funds administered by trustees on behalf of employees, which is a matter for other regulatory and investigatory bodies with whom my Department liaises where appropriate.

Funeral Costs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received requesting an investigation by the Office of Fair Trading into coffin prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I have received no such representations.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken over representations received from the National Death Centre asking him to make changes in the arrangements for consumer protection in the field of funeral expenses; and what plans he has to meet the National Association of Funeral Directors to discuss the matter.

Mr. Leigh: I have received one such representation and I am considering it. I have no current plans to meet the National Association of Funeral Directors.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of companies which have gone bankrupt in each local authority in England and Wales in each year since 1987.

Mr. Neil Hampton: There are two types of company insolvencies: compulsory liquidations and creditors' voluntary liquidations. No geographical information on creditors' voluntary liquidations is available. For compulsory liquidations the only geographical information available is by the court in which the order was made. This is not a good basis for analysing company location, since many cases in England and Wales are dealt with in London regardless of the company's location, and work may be moved between courts according to differing workloads.

Coal Consumption

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the levels of the United Kingdom coal consumption for each month of the last 12 months.

Mr. Eggar: The total monthly consumption of coal in the United Kingdom in each of the last 12 months was as follows:

	Coal consumption (thousand tonnes)
1991
October	8,143
November	9,073
December	11,302
1992
January	9,035
February	9,384
March	10,323
April	7,985
May	6,963
June	8,782
July	7,071
August	6,411
September	8,432

Coal Stores

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total maximum storage capacity for coal (a) at British Coal sites and (b) in total for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Questions about the storage capacity for coal at British Coal sites are a matter for the corporation. Figures are not held centrally for the total storage capacity for coal in the United Kingdom.

Companies House and Radiocommunications Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 November, Official Report, columns 603-5, what has been the cost to the Exchequer during the last 12 months of the visit by the chief executives of Companies House to the United States and Canada.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The chief executive's costs were just under £4,100. These were met from Companies House running costs, which are funded by fees and charges to customers.

Coal Products Ltd.

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current financing arrangements of Coal Products Ltd. as a wholly owned subsidiary of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: Following a financial restructuring of Coal Products Ltd. (CPL) involving a write-off of £120 million of loans and cancellation of £22·5 million of preference share capital, the then Secretary of State for Energy said in a parliamentary answer on 17 March 1988 at column 641 that it was intended that no further financial assistance should be given to the company by the Government or via British Coal, whether in the form of loans or guarantees. This year, however, the banks who had been financing CPL's operations indicated that they were no longer willing to extend their loans to the company without guarantees or letters of comfort being given by the Government or British Coal. In this situation, and given the difficult circumstances that the coal industry was facing, it was decided in August that British Coal should be authorised to finance repayment of the outstanding commercial loans.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the employment impact of his Department's schemes of regional financial assistance since 1984 in (a) each region and (b) each travel-to-work area.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 November 1992]: Of the regional financial assistance schemes run by my Department only regional selective assistance, available in the assisted areas of England, is conditional on employment being either created or safeguarded. From April 1984 to end October 1992 the following employment by region was either created or safeguarded.

	Created	Safeguarded	Total
East Midlands	3,753	419	4,172
North East	30,467	8,319	38,786
North West	30,566	13,215	43,781
South West	7,664	1,393	9,057
West Midlands	39,249	13,189	52,438
Yorkshire and Humberside	18,232	6,190	24,422
England	129,931	42,725	172,656

The revised regional development grants scheme which was introduced in development areas in November 1984 and was closed to new applications in March 1988, also had a jobs link. No grant was paid to undertakings employing more than 200 people unless their projects created employment. Up to the end of October 1992 these projects created the following jobs.

	Jobs
East Midlands	8,240
North East	51,823
North West	41,223
South West	5,896
Yorkshire and Humberside	15,042
England	122,224

Information by travel-to-work area is available only at disproportionate cost.

My Department also provides assistance under the regional enterprise grants scheme. Projects supported by this scheme have created employment; however, as grant was not directly linked to job creation, employment data were not collected.

Assisted Area Status

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the area, (b) the amount of grant aid and (c) the purpose to which additional funding was put for all additional resources throughout the country granted under the assisted area programme.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 20 November 1992]: Information about applications for regional grants, that is regional selective assistance (RSA) and regional enterprise grants (REG) and the purposes to which they are put, are matters of commercial confidentiality between applicants and the Department concerned. Some RSA grant details where offers are of £75,000 or more are, however, published quarterly in the Employment Gazette. In any event, information in the form requested is not readily available and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many loans have been made under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in each of the last five years in each region; and what was the actual amount given in each region.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 23 November 1992]: Information on the scheme is held by financial year. The number of loans, by region, in the last five years has been:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92

Post Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to allow the Post Office or any of its subsidiaries to raise loan capital in the market using the methods outlined in the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: There was no proposal in the autumn statement to change the rules governing nationalised industries' access to loan capital in the market.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what form the Post Office and its subsidiaries are required to hold their financial reserves; when that requirement was made; and what proposals he has to review the requirement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Under the provisions of the Post Office Act 1969 and the British Telecommunications Act 1981, the liquid funds of the Post Office not required to finance its day-to-day activities are invested within the public sector according to Her Majesty's Treasury guidelines. These guidelines were most recently revised on 27 July 1991 and currently provide for nationalised industries' surplus funds to be invested in the public sector by deposits with the following bodies:

The National Loans Fund
Gilt Edged Securities
Local Authorities
Nationalised Industries and their subsidiary companies
Other public corporations and public authorities

There are no current plans to review this requirement.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what factors he took into account in setting the external financing limit for the Post Office in 1993-94 and subsequent years.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: The external financing limit takes into account a wide range of factors including the interests of the Post Office, its customers and the taxpayer.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the external financing limit planned, and that achieved, for the Post Office each year since 1984.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: The planned and achieved external financing limits for the Post Office in each year since 1984 are as follows:

	Planned £ million	Achieved £ million
1983-84	51	61·5
1984-85	60	99·5
1985-86	70	74·7

	Planned £ million	Achieved £ million
1986-87	93	93·1
1987-88	57	80·0
1988-89	97	102·0
1989-90	91	101·9
1990-91	nil	nil
1991-92	65	74·0

Parcelforce

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on those activities of Parcelforce which he regards as part of the universal service obligation and those activities outside it.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: The definition of the universal service obligation for parcels forms part of our examination of the method and timing of sale of Parcelforce. As the President of the Board of Trade said in his statement to the House on 15 July—the provision of a universal service at a uniform and affordable tariff is not negotiable.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the representations he has received on the sale of Parcelforce.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I provided on 18 November at column 226, in respect of representations received on the Post Office. Most of the discussions that have already been held with the bodies listed therein have also covered the privatisation of Parcelforce. Additionally, our advisers have been contacting other players in the industry, on a confidential basis, for their views.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the year-end size of loans outstanding from the Post Office group to Parcelforce in each of the last five complete financial years.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Details of loans from the Post Office to Parcelforce are publicly available for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92. These loans were £44 million and £147 million at year end 1990-91 and 1991-92 respectively, as disclosed in the Post Office report and accounts for 1991-92. In previous years the accounts of Parcelforce and the Royal Mail were presented together; figures for year end loans to Parcelforce alone are therefore not available for those years.

Technology Transfer

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance he offers to companies receiving state aids about technology transfer to enterprises based in other countries; how such guidance distinguishes between direct sale and participation in joint ventures; and how it distinguishes between other countries of the EC and elsewhere.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Organisations which receive financial assistance from the Department of Trade and Industry for research and development, and for technology transfer, are encouraged to exploit the results in the United Kingdom or the remainder of the European Community. This is achieved by means of a clause in grant letters which restricts exploitation to the European Community for a period of five years after completion of the project. By this means the interests of the United Kingdom and European Community industry sectors which—normally contribute their own resources to the work—are promoted, competitive advantage is gained through technical innovation and the build-up of knowhow, and value for taxpayers' money is maximised. Exceptions are permitted. Whilst no distinction is drawn between direct sale of the results or participation in joint ventures, each case is considered on its merits with a view to maximising net benefits to the United Kingdom and European Community sectors involved. The views of any United Kingdom collaborators are also taken into account in forming a judgment.

EC Package Travel Directive

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to introduce legislation to implement the EC package travel directive.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Regulations implementing the EC directive on package travel, package holidays and package tours (90/314/EEC) were laid before Parliament on 23 November. They will be subject to the affirmative resolution procedure.

Support Programmes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the expenditure, number of formal applications and number of applicants funded in 1991-92 under the support for programmes under research scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 November 1992]: During 1991-92 expenditure on the support for products under research (SPUR) scheme was £318,000. There were 288 applications under the scheme and 148 grants, worth £12·4 million, were offered.

Consultancies

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if, for the enterprise initiative consultancy scheme, he will state outturn figures for 1991-92 for (a) expenditure and (b) number of consultancies in total, and sub-divided for (i) assisted areas, (ii) urban programme areas and (iii) elsewhere.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 November 1992]: Total DTI expenditure on the enterprise initiative consultancy scheme in 1991-92 was £64,400,000. A total of 14,387 cases were completed, 51·2 per cent. of which were in assisted areas and urban programme areas. A further breakdown of expenditure is not available.

Research and Technology Awards

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the expenditure, number of applications for the first stage competition and number of successful applicants funded in 1991-92 under the small firms merit awards for research and technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 November 1992]: During 1991-92 expenditure on the small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART) scheme was £11·99 million. There were 1,422 entries for the SMART stage 1 competition resulting in 180 grants worth £7·73 million, being offered.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on expenditure by his Department on (a) advanced technology programmes and (b) general industrial collaborative projects in 1991-92.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 26 November 1992]: Expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry for 1991-92 for advanced technology programmes and general industrial collaborative projects was £20,233,787 and £19,622,702 respectively. These figures represent total expenditure under each scheme for that financial year.

Teaching Company Scheme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's role in the teaching company scheme; and if he will set out the expenditure on the programme for the current year.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 26 November 1992]: My Department is a major source of funding for the teaching company scheme and has £5·6 million available for the scheme in this financial year. The other sponsors are the Science and Engineering Research Council (SERC), Department of Economic Development Northern Ireland (DED/NI), MAFF, the Economic and Social Research Council (ERSC) and the Department of the Environment (DOE). Total public funding for the teaching company scheme in 1992-93 is budgeted at approximately £14 million. My Department, in collaboration with the other sponsors, decides strategic policy for the scheme and monitors its operation and administration by the teaching company directorate. In addition, my Department is involved in the process of appraising individual teaching company programme proposals prior to approval for grant funding via SERC.

Post Office

Dr. Marek: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the level of investment by the Post Office authorised for 1993-94 underlying the external financing limit announced in the autumn statement; and what investment total was originally requested by the Post Office.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 26 November 1992]: Discussions between the Post Office and the Department of Trade and Industry about the Post Office's capital investment programme are a matter of commercial confidentiality. The capital investment limit for the Post Office for 1993-94 has now been set at £321 million.

Telephone Selling

Dr. Marek: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made towards the establishment of a register to combat the problem of unsolicited telephone selling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 26 November 1992]: The telecommunication services licence and the self-provision licence, both issued under the terms of the Telecommunications Act 1984, provide for the establishment of a register on which people who do not wish to receive unsolicited telephone sales calls can place their numbers. Once this register is in place, anyone who makes such a call to a number on the list will be in breach of the licence and, ultimately, the Director General of Telecommunications can remove the right to operate under the licences from persistent offenders, making them unable to use their telephone systems. Oftel is discussing the arrangements for the register with interested parties. These discussions have proved more difficult than at first expected. Oftel will, however, announce its conclusions as soon as it is able to do so.

SCOTLAND

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since the last general election.

Mr. Lang: Since the last general election, deregulation measures have been implemented under the following:

"The Building (Self-Certification of Structural Design) (Scotland) Regulations 1992"

"The Control of Pollution (Licensing of Waste Disposal) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1992"

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since the last general election.

Mr. Lang: Since the last general election, the following measures have been introduced:

"Charities Accounts (Scotland) Regulations 1992".

"The Salmon (Definition of Methods of Net Fishing and Construction of Nets) (Scotland) Regulations 1992".

"Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Fishing for Cockles) (Scotland) Order 1992".

"The Road Works (Qualifications of Supervisors and Operatives) (Scotland) Regulations 1992".

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of deregulation of regulatory matters which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Stewart: I have responsibility for the oversight of deregulation of those regulatory matters, falling within the responsibility of the Scottish Office, which impact on businesses.

Telephone Metering

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he intends to issue to the police about the practice of telephone metering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have been reviewing the arrangements currently in place whereby the police obtain information from the telecommunications operators about use of the network. This information concerns the destination, timing and duration of calls, but does not involve listening to conversations. I am satisfied that the statutory requirements are being met and that there is no need for legislative change. Nevertheless, there are sensitivities involved in providing access to this information, disclosure of which is generally an offence except when made to help prevent or detect crime or for the purposes of criminal proceedings. I have, therefore, approved the issue of operating guidelines to police forces in Scotland. A circular issued today covers such issues as the seriousness of the offence to justify the approach for information; the level of police rank required to authorise an application; and the safeguarding of the information obtained. The circular also requires chief constables to make an annual return to my Department on the number of occasions on which such information is sought; and to confirm that the guidance was adhered to in every case.

A copy of the circular has been placed in the Library of the House.

EC Funding

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the resources attracted to Scotland from each European Community fund (a) in the past five financial years and (b) projected for the next three financial years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The European Commission allocates moneys on a calendar year basis. The Community budget beyond 1993 is likely to decided at the Edinburgh summit. It is not therefore possible to forecast what funds may be available for Scotland beyond 1993. The table sets out the information available on awards to Scotland under the main funds since 1988. There are other smaller EC funds which are of benefit to Scotland but figures for these are not held by the Scottish Office.

Local Government Finance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing, in descending order, (a) the aggregate external finance and (b) Government-supported expenditure for each local authority area by (i) region, (ii) district and (iii) on a per capita basis for each of the past five financial years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested, from 1990-91, the year in which aggregate external finance (AEF) was introduced, to 1992-93 is given in tables 1 to 3 in descending order of AEF per community charge payer.

Notes:

1. AEF figures consist of revenue support grant, non-domestic rate income and specific grants (except urban programme specific grant, figures for which are not readily available). Community charge grant is also included for 1991-92.
2. Government support expenditure (GSE) consists of grant aided expenditure and loan and leasing charges.
3. The per capita figures have been calculated using the number of community charge payers on which AEF was originally distributed for each of the years.
4. The GSE per capita figures are in broadly the same descending order as those for AEF but not in every case. This is because some expenditure which is supported by AEF is not included within GSE (eg. urban programme expenditure).

Waste Heat

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies have been carried out into the development of utilising waste heat from whisky distilleries as a source of energy for the production of glasshouse crops in Scotland; what plans he has to promote such schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: A study to examine the potential for the economic recovery and use of waste heat arising from distillery processes, was undertaken at the Glengarrioch distillery in 1985. The study was supported under the Energy Efficiency Office's former energy efficiency demonstration scheme.

The Energy Efficiency Office promotes and commissions a wide range of such studies, exemplifying the energy savings available over a wide range of industrial and commercial techniques and technologies. A programme of seminars, run by the energy technology support unit and the building research and energy conservation support unit on behalf of the Energy Efficiency Office, also promotes these techniques and technologies direct to both industry and commerce.

Training

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much funding has been allocated to Scotland for training purposes in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94.

Mr. Stewart: Government funding in Scotland for training purposes forms part of the budgets of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. Details of 1992-93 provision are published in the supply estimates. Planned training provision for Scotland in 1993-94 will be included in the respective budgets for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, details of which will be announced later.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places have been allocated to Scotland (a) in 1992-93 for (i) employment action and (ii) employment training and (b) in 1993-94 for training for work.

Mr. Stewart: In 1992-93, the employment service contracted for the provision of up to 3,600 places on the employment action programme in Scotland. Information about employment training places for 1992-93 is not available in the form requested. Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise contract with local enterprise companies in terms of trainee weeks rather than training places; and there is no standard basis for converting volumes of trainee weeks into training places because the time spent by individuals in training varies. Figures for training for work for 1993-94 in Scotland will not be known until nearer the start of the contracting year.

Special Needs Education

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve the provision of special needs education in the (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) tertiary sectors of education; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Provision for special educational needs in primary and secondary education is the responsibility of education authorities under the terms of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980. Every child or young person with special educational needs who attends school must be offered an adequate and efficient education suitable for his or her individual requirements. Funding for this is contained in the annual aggregate external finance settlement.

The Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 gives the Secretary of State a new duty from 1 April 1993 to secure the adequate and efficient provision of further education in Scotland, and in doing so to have regard to the requirements of those over school age with learning difficulties. Boards of management of further education colleges will be given guidance on ways in which they can continue to widen opportunities for students with learning difficulties.

The Scottish Higher Education Funding Council, established under the 1992 Act, is required by the Secretary of State to consider how access to higher education for students with particular needs, including those with special educational needs, can be facilitated.

Scotcare Rehabilitation Unit

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all grants and other moneys given by his office to the Scotcare brain injury rehabilitation unit in Uddingston since its inception.

Mr. Stewart: No grants or other moneys have been given directly by the Scottish Office to the Scotcare brain injury rehabilitation unit.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were referred from each health board to the Scotcare, brain injury rehabilitation unit in Uddingston since its inception; and what was the total cost to each health board.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested on patients referred to Scotcare brain injury rehabilitation unit since it became a national service in June 1991 is as follows:

Health Board	Number of referrals	Total cost to Health Board
Greater Glasgow	35	235,691
Lanarkshire	17	84,310
Argyll and Clyde	9	33,188
Grampian	6	78,144
Highland	5	13,896
Dumfries and Galloway	4	15,016
Fife	3	37,260
Lothian	1	820
Forth Valley	6	27,780
Tayside	4	69,360

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the Government-funded organisations expected to take part in support of Scottish Nuclear's proposals to build a dry store for nuclear waste at Torness at the public inquiry beginning on 1 December.

Mr. Stewart: Officials from Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate, Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate and the Scottish Office Environment Department have been invited to give evidence at the inquiry into SNL's proposed spent fuel storage facility.

Homelessness

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the number of households regarded as homeless in Scotland during each of the last 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures for households applying to housing authorities under the homeless legislation who were assessed by authorities as either homeless or potentially homeless can be found in table 1 of the Scottish Office statistical bulletin "Operation of the Homeless Persons Legislation, Scotland 1980-81-1991-92", which was published on 26 November. Copies of the bulletin have been placed in the Library.

Higher Education

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has in place to promote the development of creche facilities in further and higher educational institutions in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Provision of creche facilities in further education institutions is currently the responsibility of education authorities, and in higher education institutions of the institutions themselves.

From 1 April 1993 the boards of management of further education colleges will assume similar powers to provide facilities as presently enjoyed by their higher education counterparts.

Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on dampness and condensation in public sector housing in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for local authorities, Scottish Homes, and the new town development corporations to deal with dampness and condensation in their housing from the substantial resources at their disposal. Over £927 million has been made available for gross public capital investment in Scottish housing in 1992-93.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the meeting between his Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for housing and the hon. Member for Paisley, South in relation to the development of the rivers area of Foxbar in Paisley.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I had a useful meeting with the hon. Member and representatives of Renfrew district council, Strathclyde regional council and the local community on 10 September about the Foxbar rivers area of Paisley.

Following the meeting, officials in the Scottish Office have put Renfrew district council in touch with the Forgewood initiative, as an example of a successful non-Scottish Office led urban regeneration initiative which would be of interest to those involved in the Foxbar rivers proposals. Officials in the Scottish Office await an invitation to a special meeting of the Foxbar rivers steering group, following the suggestion, at the meeting, that the Scottish Office could offer advice on the partnership approach to urban regeneration.

I am pleased that Renfrew district council is one of the authorities to benefit from the additional resources I announced on 23 November and has received a housing revenue account supplementary allocation of £0·700 million. This brings the resources available to Renfrew for investment in its own stock in 1992-93 to £19·139 million and will enable the council to make progress in Foxbar this year provided it attaches sufficient priority to this.

Applications for the urban programme resources available in 1993-94 will be received from Strathclyde region and Renfrew district councils by the end of this month. The representations the hon. Gentleman has made will be taken into account in considering applications from the Foxbar rivers area.

I shall also take full account of the council's proposals for expenditure in Foxbar together with the relative housing needs of Renfrew, when making decisions about provisional allocations for 1993-94.

I have written to the hon. Member about Scottish Homes' proposals for the regeneration of the Foxbar rivers area. Scottish Homes is committed to the regeneration of the Foxbar rivers area. It has been designated as an approved area for investment by Scottish Homes in the context of the recently signed strategic agreement between Scottish Homes and Renfrew district council. Scottish Homes will therefore be considering suitable projects from both housing associations and private developers which could involve up to £4·5 million being invested in the area over the next three to four years.

Health Boards

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he applies when appointing the chairpersons and members of health boards in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend appoints health board members for the personal qualities they have and their ability to make an effective contribution, individually and collectively, to the board's work, and selects chairpersons for the leadership they can provide to the board.

Horticulture

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the state of the horticultural industry in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish raspberry sector stands to benefit substantially from an EC measure to support groups of growers producing raspberries for processing. Under this scheme, adopted in summer 1992, raspberry producer groups will be eligible for EC and United Kingdom funding to support a development programme intended to improve their competitive position. Eligible measures include replanting with new varieties and harvest mechanisation.

The ornamental sector of the industry—hardy nursery stock and bedding plant groups—is currently enjoying buoyant conditions. This was demonstrated recently when the increasingly successful and prestigious Scotgrow exhibition was again staged by this confident sector of the industry.

Ernst and Young

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contracts, and value thereof, awarded by his Department and its agencies to Ernst and Young in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 November 1992]: The contracts in the last five years undertaken by Ernst and Young, on behalf of my Department and its agencies, are listed. Details of the value of these contracts cannot be given as that information is commercially confidential.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

SIXTH SERIES

OFFICIAL REPORT

VOLUME 214

SESSION 1992–93

16th November—27th November 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
